4 killed in Egyptian violence
CAIRO (AP) — Four people, including two Western tourists, died Friday night in extremist violence in two Egyptian towns 30 kilometers apart, hospital and police sources said Saturday. In the Red Sea resort of Burgada, two German and French women died and a German man suffered serious burns when an extremist set fire to a small restaurant, police sources said. A doctor at Burgada hospital said the two victims were middle-aged West German and French women but could not provide their names. He identified the German woman's husband as 45-year-old Ted Hane whom he said had burns on 30 per cent of his body. He said a Frenchman, whose he did not identify, suffered superficial burns in the blaze but did not require hospitalization. Five Egyptians also were given first aid treatment, he said. Burgada is a popular resort overlooking the Red Sea, 230 kilometers southeast of Cairo. It is favoured by many Europeans who charter flights from their countries direct to the resort. The arson attack on the restaurant was the first reported incident of extremist violence at Burgada.

Palestinian dies in Israeli detention
OCCUPIED JERUSALEM (AP) — A 34-year-old Palestinian prisoner found dead in his cell at the Nablus jail, Israel Radio reported Saturday. It said the victim, identified as Najah Mohammad Ibrahim Tawab, had signs of violence on his body. Tawab was imprisoned last November for allegedly planting explosive devices near Israeli targets, the radio said. The army confirmed the death and said the motive behind the slaying was under investigation. Also Saturday, at least three Palestinian teenagers were wounded by army gunfire during stone-throwing clashes in the Khan Yunis refugee camp in the occupied Gaza Strip, Arab reports and hospital officials said. In Arab Jerusalem, police said three cars were badly damaged in a wave of weekend torchings, presumably by Palestinian activists. Israeli soldiers manning a road block in the occupied West Bank town of Ramallah shot an army officer early Saturday thinking he was a Palestinian activist trying to escape, the military said. The officer was driving alone in a civilian car before dawn and was manoeuvring his way past stone barricades, drawing the suspicion of nearby troops, the army said. "They ordered him to halt, then fired into the air and then at the wheels," said an army spokesman.

Queen Noor opens art exhibition

AMMAN (Petra) — Her Majesty Queen Noor Saturday opened at the Royal Cultural Centre an art exhibition by deaf artist Khaled Ayyeh. The four-day exhibition which was organised by Prince Al Bin Al Hussein Club for the Deaf includes 40 paintings depicting bedouin and the rural life in Jordan. The club's honorary President Fawzi Salameh presented Queen Noor with the club's shield in appreciation for her efforts to promote the arts. The opening ceremony was attended by Chief Chamberlain Prince Raad Bin Zaid, President of the Royal Society for Fine Arts Her Royal Highness Princess Wijdan, the prime minister's wife, several ministers, senior officials, ambassadors and members of Prince Ali Bin Al Hussein Club.

Arafat in Sudan

KHARTOUM (AP) — Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat Saturday discussed Arab issues with Sudan's military strongman Omar Hassan Al Bashir, the Sudan News Agency reported. Arafat flew in from Tripoli, Libya, Friday night on a short visit. His one-hour meeting with Bashir included discussions on the migration of Soviet Jews to the occupied territories as well as the results of the Organisation of African Unity summit which ended Wednesday in the Ethiopian capital Addis Ababa. Before leaving Saturday, Arafat was scheduled to meet with Arab ambassadors in Khartoum.

'No sign of sabotage in U.S. blast'

HOUSTON (R) — U.S. government investigators studying an explosion that killed 17 workers at a chemical plant in Houston said Friday they have not found any signs of sabotage despite a claim of responsibility from an Islamic group. The explosion at the Atlantic Richfield Co's Arco chemical plant July 5 destroyed two huge cooling towers and two waste water treatment tanks. "The Osha investigation to date has not turned up any indications of sabotage," a spokesman for the occupational health and safety administration told Reuters. "The investigation is continuing and if there were any evidence of sabotage, Osha will notify the proper authorities," the spokesman said.

Bhutto meets Algerian leader

ALGIERS (R) — Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, seeking Islamic support for her country's dispute with India over Kashmir, discussed the issue Saturday with Algerian President Chadli Benjedid. Algerian radio said Chadli expressed Algeria's "constant readiness to support Islamic countries." Pakistan wants Kashmir to be allowed to choose in a referendum whether they should join India or Pakistan. Bhutto is canvassing support before Islamic foreign ministers meet in Cairo July 30.

Pakistan, Iran sign border agreement

QUETTA (R) — Pakistan and Iran have agreed to promote cooperation between law enforcement officials on their border. The chief secretary of Pakistan's Baluchistan province and his Iranian counterpart signed an agreement providing for joint border control posts, coordinated patrols and legal cooperation.

France: No cut in nuclear arsenal

PARIS (R) — President Francois Mitterrand said Saturday France would not reduce its nuclear forces for the time being but was contemplating withdrawing its troops from West Germany. "I will absolutely not reduce our nuclear potential... because there is no real reduction of the nuclear potential of either the United States or the Soviet Union," Mitterrand said in a Bastille Day television interview. The interview followed the traditional July 14 national day parade on Paris' Champs Elysees Avenue in which 7,000 troops took part.

Moves to heal inter-Arab rifts seen high on Syrian leader's talks in Egypt

Assad, Mubarak meet in Alexandria

ALEXANDRIA (Agencies) — Syrian President Hafez Al Assad arrived Saturday for an official visit, taking his recent rapprochement with Egypt another step forward. The three-day visit was Assad's first in more than 13 years and his fourth summit this year with President Hosni Mubarak after their two countries resumed diplomatic ties last December.

Hafez Al Assad

Hosni Mubarak

It came amid indications of intensified efforts by Mubarak to patch up Syria's rifts with Iraq and the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO). The two quarrels and Lebanon's 15-year-old civil war, in which Syria has been embroiled militarily and politically, are the most burning issues in inter-Arab relations.

Mubarak and Assad embraced and kissed after the Syrian leader's plane landed at Al Nuzha airport on the southern outskirts of Alexandria, Egypt's second largest city and principal summer resort. Assad and Mubarak conferred for three hours immediately after they drove from the airport to Ras Al Tin palace, where the Syrian leader is staying.

Egyptian Information Minister Safwat Al Sherif told reporters that the two leaders discussed Arab problems and bilateral relations. He gave no details. Diplomats said plans for an Arab summit in Cairo later this year and strengthening of relations were likely to be the focus of three days of discussions.

Assad, a staunch opponent of compromise with Israel, was unlikely to see eye to eye with his host's commitment to solving the Arab-Israeli conflict through U.S.-sponsored dialogue. "I think Egypt is disappointed that its close ties with the United States haven't delivered substantive steps in the peace process in time for this meeting," said one Arab envoy.

"Both Cairo and Washington realise that no peace proposals will get anywhere without tacit support from Assad," Mubarak, working closely with U.S. President George Bush and Secretary of State James Baker, has tried to bring Israelis and Palestinians together in Cairo for peace talks. But the formation of the most rightwing government in Israel's history appears to have stalled the peace process indefinitely, Cairo-based diplomats said.

No reason has been given for choosing Alexandria as the venue for the talks. But some diplomats speculated it was because Assad believed he still unwilling to visit the only Arab capital where Israel has an embassy.

Egyptian officials said Assad and Mubarak have an open agenda embracing international, inter-Arab and bilateral subjects. The officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Mubarak is anxious to heal inter-Arab rifts or at least achieve enough progress before the next Arab summit he will host in Cairo in November.

Abraham Nafei, editor of the leading state-owned newspaper Al Ahran and a Mubarak confidant, appeared to reflect the president's feeling in a frontpage article Saturday. He suggested that Iraqi and Syrian foreign ministers meet in Cairo for reconciliation talks.

"The political climate is fully congenial now, more than ever before, for achieving a Syrian-Iraqi rapprochement," Nafei said. Egypt's national news agency MENA Friday quoted Syrian Foreign Minister Farouq Al Sharaf as saying his country's 20-year rift with Iraq would be healed eventually.

Egyptian media indicate Mubarak may try to mediate in a dispute between Assad and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat that goes back to Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982.

A Cairo-based PLO source told Reuters Saturday that Arafat was amenable to Egyptian mediation, but a breakthrough would hinge on Assad's willingness to free Palestinians in Syrian prisons and release confiscated PLO funds and arms. Assad boycotted an Arab summit last May because it was held in Baghdad. Egyptian officials believe both the Syrian leader and Iraqi President Saddam Hussein will come to the Cairo summit in November even if they have not buried the hatchet by then.

The Cairo weekly newspaper Akhbar Al Yom reported Saturday that Assad will discuss with Mubarak Syrian efforts to improve Egypt's strained relations with Iran. Iran severed diplomatic ties with Cairo in 1979 to protest the Egyptian-Israeli treaty. The chill was worsened by Egypt's military aid to Iraq in the war with Iran. Iran presently holds prisoner an undisclosed number of Egyptians caught during the war.

Akhbar Al Yom said Assad was aiming for a diplomatic resumption between Egypt and Iran, release of the Egyptian prisoners and meetings in Damascus between Iranian and Egyptian officials. Mubarak and Assad first met this year at Tobruk, Libya, during celebrations marking the anniversary of withdrawal of British troops from a base there.

Mubarak visited Damascus May 2-3 and again on May 30 on his way home from the Baghdad summit. During the Damascus talks, Mubarak said Assad was ready to receive Arafat in Syria to settle their differences centring mainly on how to approach Arab-Israeli peace.

Low-level Syrian-PLO talks have been held, but Arafat, whom Syria expelled in 1983, has not announced any plan yet to visit Damascus.

Efforts under way to persuade Singh to retract resignation

NEW DELHI (Agencies) — India's dominant party tried to persuade Prime Minister V.P. Singh to withdraw the resignation he submitted Saturday after losing a fight against political cynicism. Singh, who took office seven months ago, said he had lost the trust of his people and asked his Janata Dal party to choose a new leader.

Party President Somnappa Rayappa Bommai refused to accept Singh's resignation. "I hope — I am confident — there will be no occasion to elect a new leader," he said. "The party is united. The government will continue," Bommai said before convening a late-night meeting of the party's decision-making forum.

Singh asked to step down after three cabinet ministers quit to protest a political scandal. Two more junior ministers announced their resignations within hours of Bommai's claim of unity. The opposition congress party dismissed the political crisis as a fraud. "Frankly, I think it's a hoax. If the prime minister really wanted to resign he should have done the logical thing and gone to the president of India," said Congress Party spokesman M.J. Akbar. "It's a joke on the people of India."

The drama that brought travelling ministers rushing back to Delhi erupted late Friday when two of their senior colleagues quit over what they saw as Singh's giving in to his powerful Deputy Prime Minister Devi Lal in violation of the principles on which the minority government was elected last November.

Commerce Minister Arun Nehru, who helped propel the prime minister to power, and Civil Aviation Minister Arif Mohammad Khan quit in protest at the return to power in Haryana state of Devi Lal's son, Om Prakash Chautala, senior officials said. Junior Minister for Parliamentary Affairs Satpal Malik also resigned in anger at the return of Chautala just two months after he was ousted following the deaths of 13 people in by-election violence for which he was blamed.

Devi Lal, who preceded Chautala as chief minister of the prosperous agricultural state next door to Delhi, then resigned in anger at the treatment meted out to his son. Supporters persuaded Devi Lal, a peasant leader proud of his rough-hewn ways, to change his mind for the sake of party unity. Senior Janata Dal sources said, Nehru and Khan were among those who believed the aristocratic Singh, well known to dislike personal confrontations, should have called Devi Lal's bluff at the time. Bommai hinted that Chautala would have to resign again as part of a deal to end the crisis. If Singh had sent his resignation letter to President Ramaswamy Venkataraman instead of to the party leader, it could have opened the way for former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to try to form a new government or to have new elections held.

The deepening political crisis overshadowed the daily bloodshed in separate successionist rebellions by Muslims and Sikhs in the two northern states of Kashmir and Punjab. Critics say Singh has been too preoccupied with political juggling to have energy for political or economic initiatives.

Singh led his party in Gandhi's ouster during elections last year. Singh campaigned on an anti-corruption ticket. Gandhi's Congress Party has been out of power for a total of only three years since India became independent from Britain in 1947. Singh assembled a government based on a five-party minority coalition which relied on the outside support of Communists and Hindu right-wingers.

Qasem, Baker discuss peace efforts; U.N. chief concerned over Palestinian safety

WASHINGTON (Agencies) — U.S. Secretary of State James Baker discussed the Middle East peace process with Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Marwan Al Qasem, who later characterised the 90-minute meeting to reporters as being "very fruitful." Jordan is very concerned about the rising tensions in the region, he said, adding: "That is why we are here."

"We are trying to inject every possible idea that will keep the peace process going and to re-engage the Palestinians in the process. That is one of the elements that will ease the situation in the region," Qasem said.

"I hope that the suspension of the (U.S.-Palestine Liberation Organisation) dialogue will not last too long," he added.

During the daily press briefing, before the meeting, Deputy

State Department Spokesman Richard Boucher said that Baker and Qasem would be discussing "a range of bilateral and regional issues, including the peace process." He noted that Qasem is in the United States on a private visit. "Considering the long standing ties between the United States and Jordan, we are pleased he is taking the opportunity to meet with the secretary," the deputy spokesman said.

Qasem met with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar in New York Thursday and discussed the situation in the occupied territories.

U.N. chief voices concern

Perez de Cuellar said Friday he was deeply concerned about the safety of Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Diplomats suggested sending a second, more wide-reaching U.N. mission to the area to follow up on the inquiries of the last month's mission. "We are very much concerned about the fate of the Palestinians," Perez de Cuellar told reporters after briefing the Security Council about the visit of his envoy, Jean-Claude Aime, to the occupied territories.

Perez de Cuellar declined to give details of the report, but diplomats said he stated that Palestinians were concerned about midnight raids and rash action by Israeli police and security forces.

Arab diplomats are seeking to have Aime's report, which was delivered orally, put in writing so they can seek Security Council action to get physical and economic protection for Palestinians in the occupied territories. Aime is a special assistant to the secretary-general. Perez de Cuellar, however, indicated the report would not be issued as a written document.

Arab diplomats called for an international, U.N.-sponsored Middle East peace conference to protect Palestinians. They have said that if the Security Council does not act on behalf of the Palestinians, they will request a rare session of the General Assembly.

But Security Council consultations Friday were inconclusive, and there was no immediate statement about Arab strategy. Arab diplomats have said they will wait the secretary-general's report before deciding how to proceed.

Western and Middle East diplomats, however, suggested the secretary-general might dispatch another mission to report further.

Gorbachev accepts NATO invitation

MOSCOW (R) — President Mikhail Gorbachev accepted an invitation to visit North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) headquarters during an unprecedented meeting in the Kremlin Saturday with the Western military alliance's Secretary-General Manfred Woerner.

"President Gorbachev has accepted our invitation to come to Brussels to meet with us," a clearly pleased Woerner told a news conference after his talks with the Soviet leader and Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

Woerner, whose trip to Moscow was the first by a NATO secretary-general, said he told Gorbachev that he did not consider the Soviet Union as an adversary of NATO, but as a future partner.

Woerner, a West German, surprised reporters when he said he did not discuss with Gorbachev the role of united Germany in NATO. He had left NATO headquarters in Brussels Friday saying he would tell Gorbachev it was in the Soviet Union's interests for Germany to be a member of NATO, a proposal not yet accepted by the Kremlin.

"In the course of our discussions of arms control and manpower levels, the German question was of course mentioned," Woerner said. "Today we did not discuss German membership in NATO... since my Soviet partners did not raise the issue I saw no reason to raise it."

He said he thought the Western view that a NATO Germany would increase European stability was clear in a declaration issued by NATO leaders at a summit in London earlier this month.

The invitation to Gorbachev and other East European leaders to attend a future NATO meeting was included in the declaration, which also asked the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact to make a joint peace declaration.

No date for the Gorbachev visit to Brussels was set, Woerner said. "He said he would come back to me and let me know. I said he was welcome anytime."

Woerner, the first NATO head to visit Moscow since the Western military alliance was formed in 1949, also spoke at a Kremlin lunch with Shevardnadze.

"I came to the USSR to extend a hand of cooperation to Soviet leaders and the Soviet people," Woerner said. "We want to work together with you to build a new Europe, in which all of us can find a natural home," he added.

"Much will depend on the transformation of the NATO and Warsaw Treaty organisation military structures into political ones," Shevardnadze said. The two men held talks earlier.

New Soviet politburo seen another Gorbachev victory

MOSCOW (Agencies) — The Soviet Communist Party Saturday formally elected a new ruling politburo, but the once-supreme executive seems set to play second fiddle to Mikhail Gorbachev's new presidential council.

The politburo — the party's top body — ceded power to the council in a sharp break with tradition that strengthened Gorbachev's hand to reform the Soviet Union.

For decades the politburo dictated policy in every area of Soviet life and till now comprised senior government figures. But the new lineup contains only two members of the previous body and includes some relative unknowns.

The prime minister, foreign minister and defence minister are no longer members and belong instead to the presidential council, which Gorbachev chooses himself as state president.

Under political reforms introduced over the past two years, Gorbachev has gradually transferred executive power from the party to the government, which he effectively controls.

He was re-elected party general secretary during the 28th party congress — which ended Friday — during which he defeated hardline rivals worried by the pace of his reforms.

Ivan Frolov, editor-in-chief of the party daily Pravda, said the new policy-making Central Committee elected Friday had deliberately decided to exclude top government figures and officials with key state roles from the politburo.

"This serves to underline that the party is totally breaking with the situation in the past when it was totally incorporated into the command-and-administer system and was at the top of the hierarchy," Frolov told a news conference.

"Now the party will be competing with other social and political forces and seeking to establish its predominance mainly through an ideological and political struggle," the Pravda editor, elected to the new politburo, said.

Frolov afterwards told reporters that the politburo would meet only once a month instead of the usual once a week.

Vaulting into the politburo, the party's leading body that was doubled in size to 24 members, were the party leaders from the 15 Soviet republics as well as several moderate reformers and officials little known outside their areas of specialty.

Dropped from the politburo were Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov, KGB Chairman Vladimir Kryuchkov and Defence Minister Dmitri Yazov, as well as Gorbachev adviser Alexander Yakovlev, Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and traditionalist Yegor K. Ligachev.

Frolov announced that the new politburo will include himself, the heads of party organisations in the Soviet republics, Gorbachev and deputy party leader Vladimir A. Ivashko, as well as:

— Yuri Prokofiev, the Moscow Communist Party chief. Prokofiev is known as a moderate reformer.

— Gennady Yanayev, who became head of the Central Council of Trade Unions last year after labour unrest began spreading through the country. He will be responsible for international affairs.

Galina Semyonova, editor-in-chief of "Peasant Woman" magazine. She will be responsible for women's issues.

Gorbachev acknowledged that the party's days of monolithic power were over.

"We're on the threshold of a multiparty system. I don't see anything frightening in that," he told CBS News Friday.

Gorbachev was critical of prominent liberals who quit the party, including maverick Boris Yeltsin and the mayors of Moscow and Leningrad.

But he acknowledged that such defections point to a "gap" between the people and the party.

Albanians jubilant as they head Westward

HEIDELBERG, West Germany (AP) — Albanian refugees taken to the West in an international sea evacuation were tired but jubilant as they continued their journeys Saturday to several European countries.

The first of more than 3,000 Albanians bound for West Germany on chartered trains arrived in Heidelberg. It was the start of an exodus reminiscent of the East German wave of refugees last year that helped bring down that Communist government.

The refugees' journey began when they stormed into various embassies in Tirana more than two weeks ago to seek passage out of their country, which has resisted the kinds of sweeping reforms that have radically altered other East European countries.

The group of 125 Albanians who arrived here Saturday afternoon after a 26-hour train ride from Italy via Switzerland looked happy but exhausted. As the train pulled into the station, many joyously waved their hands in victory from the train's windows; others were smiling as they disembarked, bright red Albanian passports in their shirt pockets.

"We are leaving our country because we don't want these communists," said Enkeo Hafili, a 24-year-old mechanic. "We are young... we are poor. We've never even seen a discotheque." A total of 4,500 Albanians who had sought refuge in the embassies in the Albanian capital left their homeland in an international seafair Friday.

Four ships chartered by the West German and Italian governments picked up the refugees in Durres, Albania, early Friday and took them to Brindisi, Italy.

The French Foreign Ministry announced Saturday that the ferry Orient Star, which had been part of the sea evacuation, would dock in Marseille Sunday and discharge its cargo of 544 Albanian refugees. They would be sent to reception centres in France.

Hungarian Radio reported that a special plane carrying 39 Albanian refugees arrived in Budapest Saturday on a flight from Tirana. They were placed in a refugee camp in the Buda Hills. Also aboard the plane were five Albanians who had taken refuge at the Bulgarian embassy in Tirana. They already left Budapest for Sofia, Budapest Radio said.

The 56 Albanians who had been sheltered in the Polish embassy flew from Tirana to Warsaw Saturday and were taken to an army facility.

Many of the refugees felt that wherever they wound up, life would be better than in what they believe is a backward communist state.

British minister resigns

LONDON (R) — British Trade and Industry Secretary Nicholas Ridley resigned Saturday over anti-German remarks he made in a magazine interview, a government spokesman said.

Ridley caused a furore when he told the British magazine Spectator that West Germany was out to take over Europe and that for Britain to give up sovereignty to the European Community (EC) was like surrendering to Adolf Hitler.

In his anti-European outburst, Ridley also offended the French by describing them as Germany's (Continued on page 3)

Irish envoy continues mission in Beirut

Reports conflict over release of hostage

BEIRUT (Agencies) — Pro-Iranian sources said Saturday they were still confident a Western hostage in Lebanon would be freed but could not agree on when.

"Things are going the right way... it is only a matter of time," said one senior source, a week after Iran's official news agency IRNA reported that a captive, probably a European, could soon be freed.

With Irishman Brian Keenan widely tipped as the likeliest candidate, Irish envoy Adrian McDaid spent a third day touring the Lebanese capital in search of hard information.

But another pro-Iranian security source said the release could take some time because Dublin had still "not made its position clear." The source declined to amplify the remark.

McDaid Saturday met Ali Hammoud, the Syrian intelligence officer in charge of west Beirut's security.

Syrian soldiers guarding Hammoud's headquarters at the sea-side Ramlet Baida district did not allow news reporters and photographers to wait for the Irish diplomat.

McDaid also met with Prime Minister Salim Al Hoss.

"All I can say is that I had a very interesting discussion with Prime Minister Hoss... I thought it was of importance that I talk to him and explain to him the reason why I'm here and brief him on the situation," McDaid told reporters after the 30-minute meeting.

He refused to answer questions about the outcome of his talks with Hammoud.

However, McDaid stressed that "I said yesterday that we were hopeful and today I'm still hopeful." He did not elaborate on the remark.

Asked for how long would he be staying in Lebanon, McDaid said: "Probably for a week or a bit longer. I don't know."

A source at the Irish consulate in west Beirut, speaking on condition of anonymity, told the AP McDaid "doesn't have other scheduled meetings with public figures for today and tomorrow (Sunday)."

The consulate in west Beirut's Verdun street opened exceptionally Saturday for McDaid to "maintain his contacts," the source added.

The Irish diplomat, who is based in Baghdad, flew in Thursday.

Keenan, 39, an English language teacher, was kidnapped in west Beirut April 11, 1986. No group has claimed to hold him.

However, former American hostage Frank Reed, the latest captive to be released April 30, said he saw Keenan two days before his release and said he had spent almost three years in the same house or room with him.

A group called Islamic Dawn announced Reed's release.

The Irish consulate source said earlier McDaid was "trying to find out from Brigadier Hammoud whether the Syrians had any information on the hostage release."

McDaid Friday visited IRNA's office in west Beirut to inquire about reliability of the agency's sources.

IRNA's resident correspondent Musayeb Naimi said: "We stressed that our sources are reliable and we explained to Mr.

McDaid that the hostage to be released will probably be a European national."

"He asked us about the reports that said Keenan will be released and we explained to him that our report did not name the hostage," Naimi added.

The 16 Western hostages held mainly by pro-Iranian underground Shi'ite factions are Keenan, six Americans, four Britons, two West Germans, two Swiss and an Italian.

McDaid, contacted at the Bristol hotel in west Beirut early in the day, refused to inform the media of his activities.

"I have a job to do. I'm not going to inform the press of my meetings in advance," he said.

In addition to visiting the IRNA office, McDaid spent his day Friday at the Irish consulate waiting for word from "anybody who feels he has something solid that might lead to a happy resolution."

However, the Irish consulate source said McDaid "did not receive any calls from people who have inside information on the hostages' issue."

With Syrian President Hafez Al Assad and his Foreign Minister Farouk Al Sharaa in Egypt, sources do not expect a hostage release before their return to Damascus.

Assad and Sharaa arrived in Egypt Saturday for the summit meeting with President Hosni Mubarak.

Syria has been instrumental in previous hostage releases in Lebanon.

U.N. urges compromise, separate talks in Nicosia

UNITED NATIONS (Agencies) — U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar Friday called for a fresh round of separate discussions with the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities in Nicosia.

"The coming period will be of critical importance," he said in a written report to the Security Council. "The time has come to stop mutual recriminations and to concentrate efforts on promoting reconciliation."

Perez de Cuellar called on both sides to compromise and show moderation.

He said there has been "a general deterioration of the atmosphere" in recent months and an increasing sense of frustration "because of the present lack of progress."

The U.N. chief said it was "important that the two leaders meet with me as soon as possible to agree on an outline and to launch the negotiations of an overall agreement."

He proposed holding separate discussions in Nicosia to prepare the ground. No dates were proposed.

Perez de Cuellar launched his peace initiative for Cyprus in talks with both sides in Geneva in August 1988.

He last held talks in March in New York with Cypriot President Georges Vassiliou, recognised as president of the island, and Rauf Denktaş, leader of the break-away Turkish Cypriot community in the north.

At that meeting, he said, "conceptual difficulties emerged from the very outset." He did not elaborate, but apparently was referring to Denktaş's call for self-determination by Turkish Cypriots, which could be interpreted as a push for separate statehood. After that, the talks collapsed.

The Security Council asked Perez de Cuellar to resume negotiations.

He called on the two communities Friday "to convey to each other, through their words and deeds, a clear message that promotes mutual confidence."

U.N. troops were sent to Cyprus in 1964 to maintain peace between the Greek majority and Turkish minority. In 1974, Turkish troops invaded and still occupy the northern part of the island. U.N. forces patrol the "green line" between the two communities.

The Greek Cypriot government, which is recognised by the United Nations, seeks the withdrawal of Turkish troops and says Cypriots should be able to live and work anywhere on the island.

But Turkey insists on guarantees of the rights of Turkish residents.

In the next separate talks in Nicosia, Perez de Cuellar said, both will be asked their positions on key issues to create an outline for a settlement.

Once a mutually agreeable outline is within reach, he said, both leaders would be invited to meet him to finish it and start negotiating an overall agreement.

'Infectious wound'

The secretary general of the Council of Europe, Catherine Lalumière, has said the division of Cyprus was a wound which could infect other parts of Europe.

Lalumière told a news conference at the end of a three-day visit to Cyprus she had been shocked and saddened by the wall dividing Nicosia.

"It is a scandal in the strongest sense of the word. In today's Europe, such barriers are inconceivable," she said.

"If we don't do something about this abyss, it risks spreading to the rest of Europe and becoming like gangrene."

She said the Council of Europe, which includes Cyprus, Turkey and Greece among its 23 member states, supported efforts by Perez de Cuellar to resolve the problem.

Iran says it plans case against S. Arabia

NICOSIA (Agencies) — Iran's top judge Ayatollah Mohammad Ali Yazdi said Friday Tehran would lodge a complaint against Saudi Arabia with international courts for the death of 1,426 pilgrims in the Hajj tunnel tragedy.

A Saudi Arabian newspaper, Al Riyadh, said in an editorial Friday that Tehran was partly to blame for the stampede because fears of a possible Iranian attack made people panic.

"Iran's precedents and intimidation of pilgrims, starting with smuggling explosives and ending with trying to explode bridges near the Mecca mosque, made pilgrims feel in danger of any incident instigated by Iran," the paper said.

Tehran Radio quoted Yazdi as saying: "Unfortunately, international organisations and human rights bodies have approached this great calamity with indifference, and Islamic governments, too, by merely condemning the actions of the Saudi regime, have passed over the issue."

Saudi Arabia has described the tragedy earlier this month, in which thousands of pilgrims were crushed or suffocated in a 600-metre tunnel, as an act of God for which it could not be blamed. "I am busy drawing up a basic and legal complaint to international courts against the ruling Saudi regime," the radio, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corporation, quoted Yazdi as saying.

Saudi gesture

Ten Turkish pilgrims seriously injured in the tunnel tragedy returned to Ankara Friday aboard an aircraft provided by Saudi Arabia's King Fahd.

A further 22 sick and injured pilgrims arrived home aboard a Turkish airliner. About 550 Turks were crushed or suffocated in the tunnel near Mecca 11 days ago.

Health Minister Halil Savgin, who travelled on the Turkish plane, said it was not clear exactly how many Turks died or were injured.

"According to our findings, some pilgrims who have been reported dead are in fact alive. It will take time to determine the exact number of living and dead," he told reporters.

The Turkish parliament will debate the tragedy next Thursday at the request of opposition parties.

Taipei resigned to break in ties with S. Arabia

TAIPEI (R) — Taiwan's foreign minister said Saturday relations with Saudi Arabia had reached their lowest point and there was little hope of preventing Riyadh switching diplomatic recognition to China.

Fredrick Chien told parliament his ministry would do everything to hold on to formal ties with Riyadh but the prospect of success was slim.

Taipei's relations with Saudi Arabia, its only diplomatic ally in the Middle East and its major supplier of oil, had "reached their worst point," he said.

He said Saudi Arabia was planning to send an envoy to Taiwan for talks on the matter, but declined to give details.

He also declined to say how Taiwan would respond if Riyadh switched recognition to Beijing. He said only that if that happened "I would take full responsibility for it."

Chien said Taiwan would maintain trade and economic ties with the kingdom.

Asked by legislators whether ties with Riyadh were reaching a breaking point, Chien's simply said: "Yes."

Only 28 countries have diplomatic relations with Taipei, recognising the claim of the Taiwan nationalists to be the government of all China.

Taiwan has been technically at war with China since the nationalists fled to the island in 1949 following defeat by the Chinese Communists in civil war.

Signs of a diplomatic break with Riyadh came with a visit to Beijing this week by Prince Bandar Ben Sultan, Saudi envoy to Washington.

Taiwan has scored a number of diplomatic victories over the past year, establishing formal ties with six countries, including Granada, Lesotho and Liberia.

Analysts said China was trying to hit back against Taipei's aggressive diplomatic push.

"Saudi Arabia is becoming Beijing's first target in its counter-offensive against our diplomatic push," said Lu Ya-Li, professor of politics at National Taiwan University.

Churches alarmed over exodus of Christians from Mideast

LIMASSOL (AP) — The Middle East's Christian prelates have voiced alarm at the exodus of Christians from the region at a time when hundreds of thousands of Soviet Jews are expected to flood into Israel and the occupied Arab territories.

"Middle East emigration could not be seen in the light of the current crisis created by Soviet Jewish emigration to Israel, the occupied territories and East Jerusalem," the executive committee of the Middle East Council of Churches said in a statement Friday.

The committee also blamed Israeli human rights violations in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, and spreading Islamic fundamentalism for the exodus.

The communiqué was issued after a three-day meeting of the 24-member committee. It consists of senior representatives of the region's four main Christian sects, the Eastern and Oriental Orthodox, Roman Catholics and Anglican-Protestants.

"While emigration is a matter of deep concern, it is symptomatic of deeper causes which can be traced to the political, economic and human rights situation in the Middle East," the communiqué noted.

It added that it was consequently necessary "to join with other religious and non-religious organisations, as well as governments, to work together to increase awareness among people for the concern for human rights."

The communiqué reiterated the council's support "for the restoration of the rights of the Christian community in Jerusalem, in the context of the realisation of justice and peace in Palestine-Israel as a whole."

It also repeated a call last January by the council's general assembly for the right of the Palestinians to establish a state of their own.

The concern over the accelerating Christian exodus coincided with a survey of Christian Palestinians in Jerusalem and the West Bank and Gaza that showed 2,160 Christians were emigrating from those areas every year.

The survey was carried out by the Ecumenical Institute for Theological Research in Bethlehem.

Samir Kafaty, the Anglican bishop of Jerusalem, said during the executive meeting that the wave of emigration from the area "is not a peculiarly Christian problem."

"But we are a minority and it's more visible and noticeable in our case."

Emigration by Christian and Muslim Palestinians was being spurred "by the massive Soviet Jewish emigration which supercedes any other political problem," he told a news conference Friday.

"Israel previously pushed people out and now with the coming of the Soviet Jews, there's a new threat for taking over the place not only of the Christians but also of the Muslim population," he added.

It is believed there are only 45,000 Christians among the 1.8 million Palestinians who live in Jerusalem and the Israeli-occupied territories. Another 91,000 Arab Christians live in Israel.

The council estimates that the total Christian population in the Middle East is 14 million.

Kafaty said it was necessary "to attack the cause of emigration and not the symptoms, and the cause is the violation of the human rights of the people."

But he admitted that the spread of Islamic fundamentalism in the region was also driving Christians out.

"We are in an area where there are religious states and we must look at this aspect also as one of the reasons," Kafaty said.

But he noted that "we cannot blame" the Christian exodus on "religious persecution."

Gabriel Habib, the council's secretary-general, said the lack of democracy in much of the Arab World was also a factor.

"There is a lack of freedom, a lack of democracy and there is intellectual terrorism. This applies not only to Christians but to everybody," he added.

The committee meeting was the first since its election in January by the council's general assembly, which meets every four years.

Bahrain to export dhows worldwide

MANAMA (AP) — Bahrain's traditional dhows will soon hit world markets starting with the United States, a tourism official disclosed Saturday.

Ahmad Amin Al Khaja, superintendent of tourism exhibitions, said that the export plan was part of a master scheme to salvage a dying industry, already classified by Bahrain as a handicraft.

Dhows, low-sided sloops which the Gulf has used from the earliest days of seafaring to plough the waters, are hand-made wooden boats similar to the ancient Egyptian and Greek reed boats.

These boats provided the bread and butter of sea-captains and dhow-builders for generations. Sea-captains used these single-masted boats for trade, for deep-sea fishing, pearl-diving and cruising, or to carry passengers across the Gulf, especially during the Hajj pilgrimage season to Mecca.

Dhow business in Bahrain almost sopped after the inauguration of the Bahrain-Saudi Arabia causeway in 1986, following the virtual end of pearling that once flourished here. The dhow industry is now striving for existence.

"We're taking steps towards helping balance the loss," Khaja told the Associated Press. He said the Bahrain Tourism Projects Company, which will handle the exports, has also begun renting dhows to companies, banks, schools and government offices in Bahrain for 150 dinars ($450) for eight hours.

"Soon this offer will be open to the public," Khaja said.

Elaborating on the export plans, he said worldwide promotion campaign were under way, and that responses came from Australia as well as the United States. But he refused to specify the interested parties.

The seaworthy boats, made practically only of teak planking and hemp, in Bahrain cost between 40,000 to 80,000 dinars ($120,000 - 240,000), he noted.

"Some people are expected to buy these boats because they are interested collectors of ancient skills and antiques," Khaja said.

"Others will actually use them for fishing and cruising."

The boats can carry 60 people at a time. They are strongly built and can last for almost a 100 years. Builders use wood imported from India and Nepal, using simple non-electric tools.

Khaja noted that it took 1½ years to complete a large dhow, and six months for a small one, needing six builders to spend hours building it.

The more recently built dhows, and probably the ones that will be ordered for export, are well-equipped, with life-savers, radios, compasses and other equipment.

The dhow weighs 10 tons, sometimes reaching 50 tons, depending on the size. The length of the sail is 1½ times longer than the dhow itself.

Mummies to be checked for AIDS-type viruses

AMSTERDAM (AP) — Dutch researchers say they will search for traces of AIDS-type viruses in ancient Egyptian mummies.

A research team will use a recently developed cloning process to study the mummies' genetic makeup.

The team, led by Dr. Jaap Goudsmit of the Amsterdam Medical Centre and Dr. Rutgers Perizonius of Utrecht University Hospital, will extract genetic chains from samples of skin and bone tissue taken from mummified humans and animals.

"The idea will be to look for DNA sequences comparable to the sequence left by AIDS-infection," said Dr. Jan Gelen, a biochemist working on the research team.

The tissue analyses are scheduled to begin early next year. DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid, is a genetic structure found in every living cell that contains hereditary information.

The so-called polymerase chain reaction technique used by the researchers can copy and magnify the DNA chain remaining in a cell after death and permit its detailed study.

Officials deny plan to build nuclear plant

AMMAN (J.T.) — The Ministry of Energy and Mineral Resources and the Jordan Electricity Authority (JEA) Saturday flatly rejected a local press report that Jordan might build a nuclear power-generating plant in the Aqaba area.

"There is no substance to the report whatsoever," said an official spokesman for the ministry. "It is totally unfounded."

A JEA spokesman echoed the same denial. "It is in fact news to us," he said. "We are as surprised as you are," he told the Jordan Times over the phone. "We are trying to figure out where the so-called 'leak' came from."

Asked whether the authorities had conducted a study on the feasibility of building a nuclear power plant, both spokesmen said they were not aware of the existence of such a study.

According to the controversial report, which appeared in an Arabic-language daily, the presumed study found that the project would cost as much as Jordan's gross national income for the next 14 years. Therefore, the report said, "it is inevitable that major foreign governments would have to contribute to the project."

Energy experts also dismissed the story. "Jordan's present requirement of electricity warrants a capacity of not more than 530 to 550 megawatts," an expert told the Jordan Times. "The Kingdom has an installed capacity of slightly over 1,000 megawatts and it is inconceivable that it would embark on a nuclear power plant project in the foreseeable future."

Economists said for any nuclear power plant to be economically feasible the minimum consumption requirement should be 2,000 megawatts. "Jordan's requirement is not expected to exceed more than 800 megawatt installed capacity even by the year 2,000 one economist said.

3 dead, 45 injured in 4 months in festive gun fire

AMMAN (J.T.) — The Public Security Department (PSD) Saturday reported the death of three persons and the injury of 45 others in the first four months of 1990 in Amman and nine other towns in the Kingdom; the deaths resulted from firing arms at weddings and other joyful occasions.

Of these incidents, 13 were in Amman, nine in Irbid, nine in the Balqa area while the rest occurred in Karak, Maan, Zarqa, Badia, Aqaba, Tafleh and Madaba, the PSD statement said.

Statistics showed that 34 of a total of 57 firing incidents during this period were caused by young people, aged between 18 and 27, and that the majority of the victims were below 18 years of age, the PSD statement said.

Those injured or killed in these incidents were hit by stray bullets and most of the weapons seized after the incidents proved that they were unlicensed, the statement added.

The statement noted that last year's total incidents amounted to 224, resulting in the death of 28 persons and the injury of 192 others. Most of last year's incidents occurred in Irbid, which accounted for 29.5 per cent of the total number of the incidents; followed by Amman which had 22.8 per cent share of the total number.

The statement said that out of the 207 people involved in firing incidents last year nine were females, aged between 18 and 37.

The PSD statement said that most of the firing incidents are reported during the summer when most of the weddings occur and when expatriates return for a family reunion or vacation in Jordan.

It said that apart from firing at weddings or when male babies are born, firing often occurred when youths were reported trying to clean guns or tampering with them.

According to the law, anyone caught firing bullets can be jailed for a maximum of three months, and anyone possessing a gun without an official licence can be imprisoned for up to one year.

The martial court used to deal with cases involving firing of weapons, but since January 1990 firing cases have been referred to civilian courts.

According to the PSD statement, the host of the wedding party will be held responsible for the firing incidents should he fail to warn his guests of the need to refrain from firing weapons in expression of joy.

It said that stricter monitoring of weddings will be maintained and violators of the law will be prosecuted.

House rejects move to abolish Ministry of Higher Education

By Abdullah Hasanat
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The Lower House of Parliament Saturday rejected two amendments proposed by the government to higher education laws on the grounds that they fail to ensure the independence of higher education.

Both amendments, to two separate laws, would have reversed two laws enacted by the government of former Prime Minister Zaid Rifai which in 1989 established the Ministry of Higher Education and abolished the universities' boards of trustees.

The first proposed amendment to the universities' law sought to reestablish the universities' boards of trustees; the second amendment would have abolished the Ministry of Higher Education and transferred its duties to the Ministry of Education. Both amendments were rejected by the House legal and education committees.

The debate on the House floor Saturday turned into one among the members of the two committees. While most of those speaking during the session agreed that the proposed amendments did not ensure the independence of the universities, many wanted to retain the Ministry of Higher Education.

Deputy Mohammad Abu Faris, rapporteur of the legal committee, after reading the committee's decision, objected that the boards of trustees, as proposed, are "government-appointed, which turns the universities into government-run institutions."

Prime Minister Mudar Badran countered by reminding the House of the constitutional division of authority, implying the government is the authority that can name the members of the board of trustees. Badran hinted that universities, if completely independent from government, cannot ensure proper funding.

He said that he was against privatising higher education. He said that the fees of the proposed private university in Zarqa would be very high for students to afford.

"Private universities fees will be as high as JD 1,500," the prime minister said. Fees at the four state-run universities range between JD 380 a year for students of the humanities to around JD 700 for science students.

Badran, chiding deputies for "opposing just for the sake of opposition," stressed that establishing trustee boards would ensure competition for better education between universities.

Deputy Taher Al Masri, the chairman of the House Foreign Relations Committee and foreign minister in Rifai's cabinet, agreed with the prime minister. Masri, however, asserted that higher education in Jordan was "beginning to weaken and that cannot be rectified unless we ensure the independence of the universities."

Masri said he believed that trustee boards would ensure universities' independence. He did not agree to abolish the Ministry of Higher Education. Chairman of the House Education Committee Thounqan Hindawi said there was contradiction in the proposed amendment. Hindawi, who served as deputy prime minister and minister of education in Rifai's government said, "the authority granted to the Council of Higher Education contradicts the objectives of the law."

Replying Badran's accusation, legal committee Chairman Hussein Mjally stressed "none of us is opposing just for the sake of opposition." Mjally, a lawyer and ex-president of the Jordan Bar Association, countered that past trustee boards were never independent and could not solicit solid donations.

Mjally said the proposed amendments was "not satisfactory and freedom of education was not even mentioned."

The House earlier listened to the verdict of the Higher Council concerning the government decision to retire the president of the Audit Bureau, Dr. Hashem Al Dabbas.

According to the constitution, the retirement of the Audit Bureau president must be approved by the Lower House of Parliament when it convenes.

However, the Higher Council ruled that since the subject was not on the agenda of the House during its current extraordinary session, the House can not discuss the matter unless a Royal Decree was issued adding the issue to the House agenda.

The Higher Council is composed of three members of the Upper House of Parliament, five judges from the Court of Cassation and the speaker of the Upper House as president.

Queen inaugurates handicrafts centre

SALT (J.T.) — The formal opening of the Salt Handicrafts Training Centre (SHTC) — a joint project carried out by the Salt Development Corporation (SDC) and the Italian government — took place Saturday in a celebration attended by Her Majesty Queen Noor and other dignitaries.

The Queen unveiled a marble plaque at the outset of the celebration, declaring the training centre officially open.

The Italian government provided some JD 600,000 towards constructing and equipping the centre and financing the cost of maintaining the services of the Italian instructors. SDC provided JD 200,000 over a two-year period to finance the construction of certain facilities and the purchase of equipment and furniture, according to a statement by Noor Hussein Foundation (NHF).

which is entrusted with supervising the centre's management and operations.

According to an Italian specialist who briefed the Queen on the various parts of the centre, trainees can be trained in printing on silk, and works in ceramics, dyeing and textiles.

The Queen toured different sections and watched trainees and their instructors carrying out their tasks.

Later the Queen was briefed by the project director, Arwa Al Tal, on plans to introduce other handicrafts like jewellery, metal work, glass, restoration of archaeological sites in Salt and traditional crafts.

NHF said that work on the project started in 1987, following an agreement for assistance from the Italian government reached in 1986. The centre, the Queen was told, runs training courses for three-year periods, offering training to 60 trainees simultaneously. The trainees must have completed their preparatory school education and successfully passed an entrance examination.

NHF said that the centre is designed to create a new generation of skilled craftsmen and to provide trainers and instructors for the various trades.

The centre's activities are conducted under the supervision of Italian specialists; they entail three-year training courses for the students and in-service programmes for trainers.

Following the opening ceremony the Queen visited the Salt Cultural Centre and the Folklore Museum inspecting items depicting national heritage and pictures reflecting life in Salt.

Jordanian firms scored success in Indonesian fair

AMMAN (J.T.) — Jordanian firms and companies which took part in a month-long fair held in the Indonesian capital of Jakarta have found it successful and concluded deals to sell Jordanian products in the Indonesian market, according to an announcement by Halim Abu Rahmeh, executive director of the Jordan Trade Association (JTA).

Eighteen companies from Jordan took part in the fair along with Indonesia, Pakistan, China, Taiwan and Vietnam and the annual event marked a success for Jordan which exhibited its local products to the Indonesian market, said Abu Rahmeh upon return from Jakarta at the end of the fair Friday.

Jordanian firms displayed samples of pharmaceutical products, carpet, drip irrigation equipment, plastic pipes, perambulators, fertilisers, gas stoves, potash and phosphate, attracting visitors in large numbers, Abu Rahmeh said.

He said that Jordan's participation aimed at familiarising visitors and Indonesian merchants with Jordan's national products and at offering the chance for Indonesian and Jordanian businessmen to meet and discuss trade prospects.

"The Indonesian market is vast and has a great potential for Jordanian products which are of high and competitive quality," Abu Rahmeh said.

"JTA organised Jordan's participation in the fair and together with the participating companies shared the cost of the Jordanian pavilion which stood at about $50,000," Abu Rahmeh added.

"Some of the Jordanian businessmen succeeded in concluding contracts with Indonesian agents to market Jordanian products in Indonesia," said Abu Rahmeh who was optimistic over the prospect of bartering Jordanian products for Indonesian raw materials such as a wood, paper, iron and chemicals.

"The Indonesian corporation responsible for fairs has extended an invitation to Jordan to take part in an international industrial fair to be held in Jakarta in March 1991," Abu Rahmeh announced.

The JTA, which was established at the beginning of 1989, aims at developing and expanding exports, identifying new markets for national products, providing services and information facilities to local companies that seek foreign markets.

According to Abu Rahmeh, the Jordanian companies were successful, being on a par with 500 strong, competitive companies and business firms from the participating nations.

Bakeries alarmed over work permits

By Mariam M. Shahin
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — A long-standing dispute between the Public Bakers Union and the Ministry of Labour over work permit fees for foreign labour has come to the forefront for the fourth time in three years in what unionists call the "fight for the price of bread."

While three consecutive ministers of labour agreed to overrule a standing law which requires the payment of JD 100 for every foreign worker employed by a bakery owner, the current ministry, headed by Minister Qasem Obeidat has decided to uphold the law and insist on the payment.

Bakery unionists claim that with a ceiling on the price of bread, as imposed by the Ministry of Supply, bakery owners will "go broke" if the law is applied.

"We have to uphold the law, which in this case requires the payment of JD 100 per foreign worker every year," said Obeidat.

Obeidat contends that if the union wants the law changed it can lobby with the house of representatives and the judiciary. "If the law changes we will apply it, but if we agree to bend the law or make an exception then we will open the door to members of other professions to ask for the same exemptions," Obeidat pointed out.

The minister said that he had given the bakeries a programme from July 20 to Oct. 20 to pay their workers' fees in four stages to alleviate their financial burden.

Meanwhile, the head of the Public Bakers Union Abdul Ilah Al Hamawi argued that by the time the law is changed Jordanian bakery owners will be "in debt over their head" and many bakeries will be forced to close.

"We came to an understanding with the ministry in 1987 when the foreign workers' permits cost JD 30 and the ministry agreed to cancel the fee all together," Hamawi told the Jordan Times.

Bakery unionists argue that since bread is a basic food staple with fixed prices, the government should make special regulations for bakery employees.

"Our problem with Jordanian employees is that no Jordanian wants to work in a bakery; it seems many would rather be out of work," said Hamawi.

He argues that "it is not up to bakery owners to change the mentality of Jordanians who seem to think it shameful to work in a bakery."

The working conditions of bakery employees are not enticing to many Jordanians according to Hamawi.

The shift involves 12 hour work, seven days a week at less than JD 3 per day or JD 84 a month with no vacation.

"The low wages do not permit the payment of the JD 100 work permit by the foreign workers, most of whom are Egyptians, and the bakery owner can't pay the fee because he will make no profit if he pays this amount," says Hamawi.

The threat of economic "unviability" has already spread panic among many bakery owners according to unionists.

Out of the 300 registered bakeries in Amman Government 60 are up for sale, according to union officials.

Bakery officials claim that the welfare of the country's 700 registered bakeries is at stake. Officials at the Ministry of Labour say that adaptation by the entire community to new economic realities is necessary.

Since the issue was discussed with the current minister four months ago bakery officials say that they have attempted to lure Jordanians into the bakery trade but to no avail.

"We were unsuccessful in tempting unemployed Jordanians into our bakeries to work," Hamawi said.

"We will continue to try to change the law and no matter what we are going to have to continue making bread for the people. We have no intention of becoming like other countries where the public sector has taken over from the private sector," said Hamawi referring to countries in the Middle East where people have to stand in line to buy bread from the early hours of the morning.

"We have no intention of insisting that the price of bread be raised nor do we care to start bread riots, but we would like the officials to meet us part of the way," concluded Hamawi referring to bread riots in Tunisia and Algeria which were no the verge of destabilising central governments as a result of a raise in bread prices.

British minister resigns over remarks

poodies. He later retracted the remarks but some colleagues in the ruling Conservative Party joined the opposition in calling on him to quit to avoid embarrassing the government further.

Ridley, 61, returned from a visit to Hungary Friday night and spoke to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher by telephone on Saturday for 15 minutes.

During the morning it appeared that he was not inclined to resign and opinion polls in two popular newspapers showed a good deal of support for him.

Critics said Ridley, one of Thatcher's closest political allies, could hardly continue to represent British trade interests after up-sting key trading partners in Europe.

His resignation was the fourth embarrassing departure from Thatcher's cabinet in as many years. The last two go was Chancellor of the Exchequer Nigel Lawson, who quit last October after a row with Thatcher over exchange rate policy.

Ridley's successor was not immediately named.

In the interview, headlined "saying the unsayable about the Germans," Ridley said it was useful to remember the lessons of World War II.

Referring to last week's visit by West German Bundesbank President Karl Otto Poehl to promote European monetary union, Ridley said: "This is all a German racket designed to take over the whole of Europe. It has to be thwarted."

"This rushed take-over by the Germans on the worst possible basis, with the French behaving like poodies to the Germans, is absolutely intolerable," he told the editor of the right-wing Spectator.

Ridley, a viscount's son whose aristocratic indifference to criticism is notorious among colleagues, then switched his attack to the European Community where Britain has been accused of being isolationist.

"When I look at the institutions to which it is proposed that sovereignty is to be handed over, I'm against," he said.

"I'm not against giving up sovereignty in principle, but not to this lot. You might just as well give it to Adolf Hitler, frankly."

Limit the pain

THE Public Security Department has just published a statistical bulletin giving details about those killed or injured in firing incidents in Jordan in the first quarter of 1990. The figures, three dead and 45 injured, bear indications that this year's incidents are going to be far below those of 1989, with less fatalities among our people as a result of stray bullets fired in weddings and other archaic occasions like the birth of male babies. The custom of firing at wedding celebrations owes its origins to ritual tribal dances expressing joy and jubilation in the Arab World, but now the habit of firing seems to have invaded towns and cities as well as the rural regions of Jordan with occasional reports of deaths and injuries that usually transformed the joy into sorrow and mourning.

In dealing with the situation in the past, governments empowered military courts to deal with such incidents, imposing heavy fines and jail sentences against those involved in firing weapons. That was intended to reduce the number of victims from such incidents and stem the use of fire arms as a whole.

What is worrying Jordanians is not only the loss of innocent life due to tampering with guns and firing weapons. Rather, it is the fact that many of the weapons seized by the police were generally found unlicensed, and that most of those involved in firing incidents belonged to the younger generations of about 18 to 27.

Notwithstanding the government's decision last January to refer incidents of this sort to civilian (rather than military) courts, one would expect stricter control on licensing weapons and heavier penalties and jail sentences for those firing weapons in populated regions to follow suit.

The statistical bulletin provided by the police Saturday can by no means bring the dead back or reduce the pain caused already to bereaved families, but it can at least remind Jordanians of the pressing need to continue the fight against reckless actions and needless casualties in our society.

Jalal Rihai - Al Dastour

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

Al Ra'i Arabic daily Saturday described President Hafez Al Assad's visit to Egypt as a very important step towards building a unified Arab stand at a time when the Arab Nation is facing mounting challenges. The visit, coming after a break of 13 years has been welcomed by all Arab states since it helps Arab leaders to consult on issues of common interest and on the future stage of Arab action, said the paper. Needless to say that any Arab political influence and any respect to be gained from other nations can only come through solidarity among themselves, the paper added. Al Ra'i referred to hostile statements which tried to depict the visit as an attempt on the part of Assad to boost his leadership following a long isolation from other Arab leaders, as means to draw a wedge in the Arab ranks and to cause further splits. One can only expect such attitudes from the enemy who is bent on weakening the Arab Nation to pave the way for implementing his plans in the Arab region, the paper added. It said that the meeting in Egypt is bound to have its beneficial effect on current efforts to convene an Arab summit meeting in Cairo in November, and to enhance the Arab World's position vis-a-vis various challenges looming in the offing.

Al Dastour daily on Saturday emphasised the importance of the intrinsic Arab force as the best and most effective weapon that can provide defence to the Arab Nation. We can be assured of our success in safeguarding our interests and of our regional and international influence if we handle our vast human and material potentials properly and effectively, and employ them in the struggle to fend off danger, said the paper. Al Dastour was referring to the Arab foreign ministers' meeting opening in Tunis Sunday to discuss the situation in the occupied Arab territories, and Washington's hostile attitude towards the Arab World. It said that the foreign ministers would achieve a breakthrough if they found a way of presenting their case to Europe and the members of the U.N. Security Council; because these parties can have a major influence on the situation in the Middle East region. For their part, the Arabs can also display total solidarity and unified stand vis-a-vis the numerous challenges posed to them by their common enemy. What the Arabs need now is a collective action based on sound strategy that can confront and deal with the Israeli threats directed to the Arab Order, the paper said.

Sawt Al Shaab daily said that all countries around the world wish to see peace established in the Middle East region except the United States and Israel. The two are opposing the views of the Soviet Union which has been calling for an international conference to achieve peace, the European Community and former U.S. Senator Charles Percy who has just voiced his warning against the prospect of renewed conflict in the region as a result of Israel's policies, demanding that Washington stop its unlimited support for Israel's practices, the paper noted. For the United States, Israel represents the custodian of Western and American interests in the Middle East, a region considered explosive by all observers and destabilising world peace, the paper added. The paper said that by supporting Israel, the United States is blindly pursuing irresponsible policies like those it had adopted in Vietnam and Korea, policies that ended up in total failure.

CBJ resolves the future of 5 banks

By Dr. Fahed Fanek

AT LAST, the central bank has made up its mind and resolved in one stroke several pending problems in the banking system. This time it was a surgical operation rather than a tranquillising medicine.

Last week, decisions were made regarding the future of Petra Bank, Jordan & Gulf Bank, Syrian-Jordanian Bank, Al Mashreq Bank, Investment and Exports Bank.

Petra Bank will be liquidated, but only after the transfer of its deposits to the Housing Bank, the second largest and most powerful after Arab Bank. Thus all the public's deposits estimated at JD 100 million will be protected. Any withdrawal of these deposits from the Housing Bank will be replenished by the central bank on weekly basis.

Deposits will retain all their terms and conditions including currency, duration and interest rates. Some depositors may withdraw their deposits but the majority may like the new arrangement, as they can not find better terms elsewhere, coupled with the unlimited guarantee of the central bank.

At the same time a new investment bank will be established to finance exports. The new bank will be entrusted with the operating assets of Petra Bank, especially real estate, shares of companies and good loans. The paidup capital of this bank will be JD 4 million, of which 50 per cent will be provided by the central bank and the balance offered to the private sector. However, the central bank will supply the Investment and Export Bank with substantial liquidity to be financed from a special fund in the central bank.

The central bank will require all banks and finance corporations to deposit amounts in this special fund equal to their deposits with Petra Bank which were withdrawn at the expense of the central bank after Aug. 2, 1989, when the CBJ took over Petra Bank and dismissed its corrupt management. These compulsory deposits will be tied for three years with a reduced interest rate of 4 to 5 per cent only. Thus those banks will not completely get away with their questionable practice, when, tempted by interest rates higher than those prevailing in the market, they were loading their liquidity onto Petra Bank for reckless expansion. Amounts involved are estimated at JD 60 million.

On the other hand, the central bank was designated by the Economic Security Committee as a liquidator to Petra Bank, in order to recover the maximum possible from the residual assets of the troubled bank. The central bank in turn will appoint a committee of legal and financial experts to do the job on its behalf.

What remains of Petra Bank is the fate of some 700 employees. The governor of the central bank has vowed to extend all practical help to absorb as many employees as possible in the Housing Bank, the new Investment & Exports Bank, and in the banking system in general. Some of them are bound to lose their jobs. Jordan & Gulf Bank was disengaged from Petra Bank.

A management committee was appointed to run the bank and recommend a formula to float the bank, either through restructuring or by selling it to an existing or new bank. The deficit in Jordan & Gulf Bank was estimated at JD 25 million. Unlike Petra Bank, Jordan & Gulf Bank's problem is only bad and doubtful debts; no outright theft was discovered.

Syrian-Jordanian Bank, which was started 15 years ago as a joint project, failed to function as planned, because Syria refused to license its Damascus branch and did not pay its share of the capital. Most likely the bank will be dealt with collectively with Jordan & Gulf Bank. The central bank is searching for a Jordanian Arab party, interested in taking over at favourable conditions. As an indication to the above, the general manager of the Syrian-Jordanian Bank was appointed as a member in the management committee of Jordan & Gulf Bank.

The Jordanian branches of the Lebanese Al Mashreq Bank will also be restructured to form part of Jordanian bank led by Arab Finance Corporation (Jordan). The operation was under process for quite some time, and may reach its conclusion soon.

The central bank have moved decisively to put an end to abnormal situations, and enable the banking system to restore its credibility as a basis for a new era of economic adjustment and healthy growth.

Good old habits to save good old men

By Mark Heinrich

EAST BERLIN — A mixture of social conscience and pre-election manoeuvring appears to be stopping the East German government from casting its bankrupt companies adrift in the economic merger with its powerful neighbour.

As East Germany disclosed last week that it was staving off unemployment for hundreds of thousands by paying industries to retain their jobs, the godfather of West Germany's financial powerhouse was in town to give contrary advice.

Bundesbank President Karl Otto Poehl said it was wrong to continue subsidising jobs in industry left terminally backward by 40 years of communist mismanagement and protectionism. "Some East German firms make the wrong products for the wrong markets at costs not in line with the market," he said after the first meeting in East Berlin of the Bundesbank.

It took control of East German finances when the Germans merged economies on July 1, a precursor to political union.

Massive private investment was needed to modernise industry and encourage West European, Japanese and American business to move in offering viable jobs for the future, Poehl said.

Those were words of wisdom from a renowned architect of inflation-free affluence. But how do you get such wisdom across to the East German worker fearing for his job in a strange new world ruled by competition, not patronage of the state?

The East German government is doing so by sitting on the fence between the country's past and future, preaching competition while quietly shielding those who are not up to it, analysts of the unfolding situation believe.

Companies converting from state to private ownership are getting state liquidity credits and straight cash infusions to keep hundreds of thousands of workers employed for the next six months at least, the labour ministry said.

"The workers are working less than before or not at all, but are nevertheless not dismissed," and receive 65 per cent of their previous income, it said — a have-it-both-ways formula with both a social and political motive, analysts say.

The first is the communist tradition of welfare guarantees which members of the right-left grand coalition now governing East Germany tout as a positive legacy of the old regime worth saving in some sort of merger with capitalism.

The second is a calculated manoeuvre to keep jobless rolls from swelling into the millions before December, when all-German general elections will be held to seal unification after 45 years of post-world war two division.

Mass unemployment could prove a powder keg of social unrest in East Germany and threaten West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's strong bid to be elected the first leader of a reunited fatherland, the analysts say.

Latest polls show the dominant Christian Democrats (CDU) in both Germanys would score a resounding majority in tandem with their junior coalition partners, the free democrats, if the unity elections were staged now.

With electoral margins in mind, Kohl's government has shelled out two billion marks ($1.2 billion) this year to finance benefit schemes hatched by East Germany's governing coalition, led by CDU Premier Lothar de Maiziere.

East German unemployment shot up by 50 per cent to more than 142,000 in June but short-time working and new retraining programmes are expected to limit dole queues through December.

The Christian democrats may also be boosted by the granting of big wage increases to East German chemical and engineering workers by industries shaken by wildcat strikes.

The pay raises would help offset sharply higher food prices caused by the abolition of communist subsidies under German monetary and economic union.

But Poehl saw economic pitfalls here as well. "The competitiveness of East German firms depends to a large extent on wage costs," he said, telling workers they could price themselves out of a job.

Mandela, the PLO and American Jews

By Ian Williams

NELSON Mandela's visit to the U.S. was a fascinating revelation of how American politics and the media personalise and demonise issues. Here was Mandela, certified as a hero, but reputed to have views on the Middle East which were the political equivalent of leprosy. A delegation of American Jewish leaders flew to Geneva to check on his political health, wanting assurances that he accepted not just Israel's existence but its moral right to existence.

Ostensibly, this was to avert the threat of pro-Israeli and anti-Mandela demonstrations in New York. Perhaps wisely, in view of the fragile state of the "gorgeous mosaic" of the city's ethnic diversity, there were no significant demonstrations. Mandela's attractions to an increasingly alienated black and Latin population are obvious, and the political implications of his transition from prisoner of the South African regime to negotiator with them are fairly clear.

The popularity was reflected in a media hype of unprecedented saturation coverage. The Empire State Building lit up in ANC colours, and the importer, for the parade, of the ticker tape no longer used in Wall Street's electronic offices, helped contribute to an image of a bandwagon running out of control as every hobby horse in New York was hitched behind it.

Continuously, one heard it said on the subway, the buses and on "vox pops" on TV that people were "taking part in history" by being on the sidewalk to greet his motorcade. But the fact that what they were doing was applauding other people's making of history is perhaps indicative of how American politics has been reduced to spectator sport for the voters and a spectacle for the viewers. As in sports, the commentators usually make the running. In American coverage of the Middle East, not least in New York, the world has hitherto appeared as a dualistic contest between pro-Israeli angels and pro-PLO demons.

Mandela's visit broke new ground. His support for the PLO was not shamed, wrested from him by inquisitorial Zionists, but volunteered. His address to the United Nations identified the ANC with the PLO and Polisario. The objections to his support for the PLO came not from ordinary blacks, who seemed delighted to hear a politician saying what he believed rather than what his supporting PACs wanted. On the Ted Koppel Show, Mandela turned the tables on Israeli supporters, who taxed him with a lack of principle for supporting the likes of Qadhafi, Castro and Arafat. He pointed out that, firstly Libya had supported the ANC at a time when others did not, and second that the ANC had Jewish leaders. Indeed, he continued implacably, the ANC refused to open an office in Libya until Qadhafi agreed to let its Jewish members in. His firm refusal to disavow alliance with the PLO was in contrast to the compromise of most black American politicians in the Democratic Party. Like Mayor David Dinkins of New York, they profess almost unqualified support for Israel. Mandela's pronouncements are a reminder of the contradictions implied by being 100 per cent anti-apartheid, while refusing to countenance any criticism of Israel. Since Israel is South Africa's closest military ally, and has probably colluded with it in nuclear testing, it is actively (increasingly single-handedly) making sanctions somewhat ineffective.

It remains to be seen whether black office holders will call the bluff of the Israeli lobbyists and show the same principles as Mandela.

'Here are the bones; where are our dollars?'

By Tom Lamsner
Reuters

PHNOM PENH — The smiling young man threaded his way between tables in a noisy restaurant in Phnom Penh and approached the only Westerner present.

"I must talk to you," he said in careful English over the chatter at the crowded table. He politely declined to sit down to join in a meal but finally accepted a glass of herbal wine. Then he repeated his request and added in a lowered voice: "but we cannot talk here. It is top secret."

In a country at war and rife with political unrest, it was hard to know what to expect. But the young man's mystery was not so unusual — his business was selling human bones.

"The fastest growing business in Cambodia is not gold and is not diamonds," said a European diplomat here. "It is the trade in remains of American servicemen missing since the Vietnam war."

He may have been exaggerating, but residents say that as Washington shows signs of relenting in its refusal to deal with Phnom Penh on the issue, the morbid trade is blossoming.

The U.S. government lists 83 Americans as missing in action (MIA) in Cambodia — a small number compared with more than 1,500 in Vietnam and 500 in Laos.

Many of those unaccounted for are fliers whose planes were on missions over Vietnam and crashed before they could return to bases in Thailand and Laos.

U.S. ground forces also briefly invaded Cambodia in May, 1970.

Cambodia announced on June 24 the creation of a high-ranking commission to seek the remains of American servicemen. Officials say they already have 34 sets of "dogtags" — identity discs — and a number of remains they would like U.S. experts to examine.

The man with a secret got down to business at a rendezvous the next day. "We have the identification tags, the card, the gun, and the bones of an American pilot... can you take a piece of the bones to the committee and find out about the money?"

The money he asked about is the reward widely rumored to be on offer in Indochina for the return of remains of American soldiers. The existence of a "committee" handing out the cash is another popular myth.

The rumor appears to have started after U.S. war veterans in the late 1980s threw notes in the Mekong River in Thailand and released balloons across the Laos border carrying messages offering rewards for the return of a live U.S. prisoner of war.

The rumor is widely enough believed to encourage a lucrative trade in purported American remains, and U.S. military identification tags and cards, genuine or otherwise.

Some Cambodians leaving by boat to seek a new life in the West have taken along bones they hope to sell as U.S. remains.

An Australian relief official in Phnom Penh said: "People turn up at the door of relief agencies and say, 'here are some remains and where are our dollars?'"

The question of Americans missing in Indochina has been an emotional one in the United States and a delicate political issue since Washington has no diplomatic relations with Vietnam and does not recognize the Cambodian government in Phnom Penh.

Past Cambodian offers to allow U.S. officials to help search for and test remains have been refused by the United States, worried it could imply recognition of Phnom Penh.

Washington supports the Cambodian Guerrilla coalition fighting to overthrow the government.

Describing the work of the new Cambodian commission, senior Foreign Ministry Official Uch Kim An said: "We are not setting up this commission just for propaganda purposes. We need the assistance of the United States to help find and identify the remains. We have no expertise in this," he added.

"We cannot be more humanitarian than the U.S. administration allows us to be," said Thon Hin, who handles the MIA issue as deputy director of the ministry's America and West Europe bureau.

"We don't demand that this be a political issue. We are ready to give the dogtags and remains we have to the U.S. government. All we do ask is that the United States send an official representative to deal with us on the matter."

On June 28, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Richard Solomon told a congressional committee in Washington that the United States was prepared to send technical experts to Phnom Penh as soon as possible.

He said: "In line with our long-standing policy, we are fully prepared to cooperate with officials in Phnom Penh to resolve the fate of Americans missing in Cambodia, as a separate humanitarian matter and despite our political differences with that regime."

Better housing for the neediest of the needy in Palestinian camps

FOR THE Palestine refugees, as for other homeless people, shelter has always been a primary concern of daily life.

At first, after their dispersal in 1948, the Palestine refugees lived in tents. In the mid-1950s, as their plight continued without solution, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) began to replace these tents with simple shelters. These usually consisted of one or two rooms — 3 by 4 metres in size — made of cement-blocks or mud bricks, with corrugated iron, tile or reed roofing and wooden doors and windows.

Social workers make surveys in camps to identify special hardship cases most in need of shelter repairs (UNRWA photo)

Most of the Palestine refugees still living in camps today — some 820,000, or about a third of the total registered refugee population — still use these original units.

These basic rooms may long since have been absorbed into larger and sturdier living space built around them by the refugees since then, but somewhere inside each camp dwelling, the original "UNRWA unit" is more often than not still to be found in use.

Over time, these original rooms have deteriorated. Since 1982, UNRWA has helped the most disadvantaged refugees — the widows, the elderly, the sick and disabled, known to UNRWA as "special hardship cases" — to repair their shelters.

Now, with the help of special contributions from donors, special hardship cases in the West Bank and Gaza Strip are getting new, well-built rooms added to their shelters by UNRWA under the Agency's Expanded Programme of Assistance for the refugees in the Israeli-occupied territory.

This "shelter rehabilitation programme" is enabling the Agency to upgrade the housing accommodation of the neediest refugees — to provide them with decent living accommodation — albeit in circumstances designed to be a temporary measure pending a political solution of the Palestine problem.

Donations for shelter rehabilitation have come from the Arab Gulf states of Kuwait and have been pledged by the government of Italy. They are earmarked for the repair or reconstruction of unserviceable rooms in shelters inhabited by special hardship cases in camps in the West Bank and Gaza.

"Our aim is to ensure that these shelters have one decent room plus a 'sanitary core' — with a shower and toilet and a kitchen," explained UNRWA engineer Sean Collins, the Agency's Field Technical Officer in the West Bank. "These rooms are built to a much higher standard than the original shelters, which were not intended to last as long as these."

"The first priority is that they should have at least one weatherproof room," added Jan Dahman, UNRWA's Field Technical Officer in Gaza. "This means concrete roofing, with waterproofing, rather than the corrugated iron we used to use."

The new rooms are also better lit and ventilated than the old ones. Their windows are bigger and their ceilings higher. In the West Bank, aluminium windows are being installed while in Gaza wooden windows are being used because they are readily available locally.

In some cases, the existing shelters are in such bad condition that the new rooms, as well as the kitchen and sanitary block, must be built from scratch. In other cases, it is sufficient just to build either a new room or a toilet block or both and repair an existing room for use as a kitchen, according to Basil Hijazi, project engineer for the shelter rehabilitation unit in the West Bank. And, he adds, sometimes it is enough only to make repairs such as plastering or replacing doors or windows.

The programme is being carried out as funding is obtained. So far, Kuwait has donated $1.4 million to UNRWA for the project — $800,000 for shelter repairs in the Gaza Strip and $574,000 for the West Bank. Italy has pledged $1.2 million for Gaza and $800,000 for the West Bank. The average cost of rehabilitation ing a shelter is $5,500. UNRWA estimates that one quarter of the special hardship cases need shelter rehabilitation — which would mean at least 2,400 shelters in Gaza and 1,600 in the West Bank. The Kuwaiti donation will pay for work on 131 shelters in Gaza and 94 in the West Bank. If funding materialises from the Italian pledge, as many as 200 additional shelters can be rehabilitated in Gaza, and another 130 or so in the West Bank — UNRWA.

Saudi Arabia goes totally 'natural'

By Donna Penn Heintzen
The Associated Press

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Saudi Arabia, which sits on 25 per cent of the world's proven oil reserves, is now protecting another natural resource — its diminishing wildlife population.

The oil boom and the rapid urban development that followed, catapulted the kingdom into the 20th century.

But the push to modernise trampled over ecological concerns and Saudi Arabia's vast expanses of desert are now virtually empty of game.

"Man has gone astray and indulged in unjustified systematic exploitation and depletion of natural resources," said Prince Saud Al Faisal, the foreign minister and managing director of the National Commission for Wildlife Conservation and Development.

Saud and others in the kingdom have looked to the Koran, Islam's holy book, for the conservation mandate.

"For there is not an animal on earth nor a creature flying on two wings, but they are peoples, like unto you," it says, "do no mischief on the earth, after it hath been set in order."

Prince Saud, a driving force behind the commission formed four years ago, was speaking at the recent release of 19 Arabian oryx, a species of large white-coated, bi-horned antelope, in Mahazat As Sayed, a 2,200 square-kilometre protected area near the western mountain city of Taif.

The Saudi conservationists are also breeding rare animals in captivity, setting up new protected areas, restoring natural habitat, and conducting an extensive public education campaign.

Saudi Arabia does not usually spring to mind as a country known for its wildlife. But, as well as the oryx, it is also home to the sand cat.

The ibex, or mountain goat, still roams the Northern Hejaz mountains and the Dorcas gazelle and sand gazelle can be found in remote southern areas.

Ironically, Saudi Arabia's initial concern for conservation came from hunters who noticed an alarming decrease in game.

"Two of the protected areas in the north were suggested by eminent falconers from the royal family," said Abdulaziz Abu Zinada, the commission's secretary-general.

Even the commission's eight governors are avid hunters. Hunting, especially with falcons, has been part of Saudi culture for generations. But the introduction of firearms and four-wheel drive vehicles has tipped the ecological balance.

Gazelles, for example, were once so plentiful in the Eastern Province that hunters could fill pickups with game in a single afternoon.

The animals, now scarce, are being successfully bred at King Khalid Wildlife Research Centre near Riyadh. By the end of this year, more than 50 will have been released into two protected areas.

The centre is also preparing to release 10 captive bred red-necked ostriches.

"The Arabian ostrich doesn't exist anymore," said Abu Zinada, "but we found that the African red-necked species closely resembled them."

The Oryx, which virtually disappeared from Saudi Arabia in the 1960s, is also being bred in captivity at the National Wildlife Research centre near Taif.

"This year, we will re-introduce into the wild six oryx captive-bred in Saudi Arabia," Abu Zinada said.

The 40 million-riyal ($10.6 million) centre was established in 1986 to breed Houbara Bastards, a turkey-like bird favoured by falconers as prey.

"The bird is facing extinction from over-hunting and deterioration of habitat," Abu Zinada commented.

The commission is tracking captive-bred and wild houbaras by satellite and radio to unravel the mysteries of their mating and migratory habits.

But breeding isn't the most important aspect of the Saudi conservation strategy. Abu Zinada said protecting the environment is the top priority.

Since there is no private ownership of rangelands, shepherds graze their livestock wherever food is most abundant. There is little incentive for conservative land management.

Food supplements for livestock has also resulted in a larger animal population with less range to support them.

The commission plans to remedy that situation by setting up 120 protected areas. Seven have already been established.

The Kingdom is using an analytical approach that has not been applied anywhere else, said Graham Child, a Zimbabwean consultant with the commission.

"We're trying to analyse the country's biological and physical characteristics so that the protected areas will represent all of the country's natural elements," he said.

Abu Zinada estimates this ambitious plan will take 15-20 years to implement.

Enforcing a system of protected areas will not be easy. Bedouins, accustomed to grazing their livestock where they please, will need appeasing.

"We're trying to choose areas where there's not so much potential for conflict," said John Granger, a British consultant.

"It's very important to have hunting laws" to keep hunters in check, Abu Zinada noted.

Legislation currently on the books is too vague and sporadically enforced.

The council of ministers is currently studying legislation mandating protected areas recommended by the commission.

Four of the commission's governors — Prince Sultan, the defence minister-Prince Nayef, the interior minister; Prince Saud, and Agriculture and Water Minister Abdul-Rahman Al-Sheikh — are sit on the council.

"The presence of so many ministers on the commission makes it much stronger than a ministry of environment would be," Child noted.

KGB adopts democratic role in the theatre of change in U.S.S.R.

By Bryan Brunley
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The general entrusted with improving the KGB's image acknowledges it will be hard to erase the terror implanted in the national consciousness by decades of official lawlessness.

"Violations of the law are a thing of the past, but the syndrome of fear unfortunately remains," Maj. Gen. Alexander N. Karbainov said in an interview.

"The KGB... still has the image of a terrible force," said Karbainov, head of the new KGB center for public relations.

His job is to change people's attitude toward the secret police agency that killed millions for Josef Stalin in the 1930s and 1940s, hounded dissidents until the mid-1980s and vied with foreign spies in the cold war.

The interview took place in Karbainov's office on the Third Floor of Lubyanka, the KGB headquarters. It is next to a corridor office occupied by agency chiefs from the founder, Felix Dzerzhinsky, to Yuri Andropov, who became the Soviet leader in 1982.

"We are meeting with you in the building of the KGB in order that you should feel that there are no super-steel bars on the windows, no terrible cells," the 44-year-old general said.

Access to the building was limited. Lubyanka's basement cells, described in Soviet prison literature, were not on the tour.

Karbainov spoke of espionage struggles with the CIA and denied a former KGB general's allegation that his agency spied on leaders of Soviet strike committees and people trying to form new parties.

He expressed opposition to proposals that the KGB's domestic and foreign operations be separated along the lines of the system in the United States, where the CIA operates abroad and the FBI acts domestically.

The KGB, which has never disclosed its budget or number of employees, controls the domestic secret police, intelligence operations abroad, the units that guard Kremlin leaders, the border patrol and several infantry divisions. It has branches in other institutions, including the armed forces, and Western reports say it also supervises nuclear weapons.

Police and KGB guards, not told that an AP reporter and photographer would visit, first refused to let them wait in the lobby or on the sidewalk outside, then scrutinized their documents when an escort arrived.

Inside the yellow, gray and pink 19th century building were long, empty corridors and several courtyards. Bars covered some windows.

Lubyanka has been opened to a few Western reporters, and Karbainov said news conferences would be held there soon.

Officers of the committee for state security, initials KGB, rove Andropov and are restoring his suite — a small bedroom, a study and an office with a switchboard from which he could call KGB stations from San Francisco to Siberia. The new director has moved his office to a new building next door.

Karbainov said his job was to publicize the positive side of security work, including the arrests in the last seven years of 31 Soviets accused of spying for foreign powers, usually the United States.

As part of the campaign, the agency has issued a trial edition of a planned monthly KGB companion. The first issue carried a new version of the arrest of A.G. Tolkachev, a Soviet engineer accused of spying for the CIA.

Western intelligence sources have said they thought Tolkachev was compromised by U.S. defector Edward Lee Howard, a CIA agent who was trained to work in Moscow but was fired and fled to the Soviet Union.

According to the KGB companion, Tolkachev was turned in by co-worker Anna Vladimirovna, who spotted him burning packets of money. Karbainov said the KGB version was accurate.

"I can just tell you one figure... the sum of money deposited into his account by the CIA: $2 million... this information is documented," Karbainov said, adding that the money went into a foreign bank.

Western agents have increased their activities against the Soviet Union in recent years, he said, and declared:

"American intelligence works well. I think that the closing stage of the cold war was accompanied by a certain activation of foreign intelligence agencies... in the Soviet Union and around the world."

He agreed with a CIA official quoted in the KGB newspaper as saying in 1984: "not long ago, we had practically no agents in the socialist bloc, but now we have so many that we can barely run them. And each year, the number of agents grows."

Karbainov's office has conducted a press campaign against Oleg D. Kalugin, a former KGB general who has urged that the agency be divided into domestic and foreign services to reduce its power.

In response to Kalugin and other reformers, Karbainov argued that intelligence and counterintelligence operations supplement each other and must remain within the same organization.

"Any separation of the functions, at least in the initial stages, reduces the viability of each part, the effectiveness of each part," he said. "It's like a human being. You can cut off his arms and legs. He is still a man, but he cannot move."

"In the United States, a different system developed from the very beginning... we can't say that everything should be alike." Kalugin accused the KGB of spying on the Russian Orthodox Church, leaders of strike committees and new political organizations that hope to compete with the Communist Party.

"It is a lie. A pure lie," Karbainov said. "In the 1930s, KGB organs had influence over all bodies, over government and party bodies. Practically, they were all instruments for strengthening the personal power of Stalin."

"Now, it is absolutely not the case. The organs of the KGB do not concern themselves with any social organizations."

Several days after the interview, at the behest of the KGB, President Mikhail S. Gorbachev stripped Kalugin of his rank and decorations, the government news agency TASS reported.

Syrian Jordanian, Jordan Gulf banks come on screen

By P.V. Vivekanand
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — With Petra Bank out of the way facing a liquidation process, the Central Bank of Jordan (CBJ) has shifted its attention to the Jordan Gulf Bank and its merger with the Syrian Jordanian Bank seems to be on the cards, according to informed sources.

The CBJ, acting under a mandate from the Economic Security Committee (ESC), has already appointed a new five-member management panel for the Jordan Gulf Bank, which was taken over by the ESC along with Petra Bank in August last year. The original idea was to merge the two banks, but the affairs of Petra Bank "were so much out of proportion" that the Jordan Gulf Bank would have "gone down with it if the merger was carried out," said a highly-informed banking source.

According to the source as well as a senior official at the Jordan Gulf Bank, the main problem with the Jordan Gulf Bank is bad debts to the tune of almost JD 27 million. "Unlike Petra Bank, there is no evidence of any outright embezzlement or misuse of funds," said the official, speaking to the Jordan Times on condition of anonymity.

"True, the Jordan Gulf Bank was, to a large extent, manipulated by the former management (of Ahmad Chalabi) of Petra Bank and found itself in trouble, but it can also be argued that the former management of (Hassan Abdul Aziz) was a victim of circumstances," he added.

According to CBJ Governor Mohammad Saeed Al Nabulsi, the shares of Jordan Gulf are a total write-off for its owners (so were those of the Petra Bank).

In any event, according to economists, sorting out the affairs of Jordan Gulf should not pose a real problem. "In fact, the situation is more or less clear after most of the books of accounts of the bank have been scrutinised thoroughly by auditors and there are three main proposals," said the source.

One is to revamp the institution, which might need an immediate cash injection of about JD 10 million, and run it as an independent bank; the second is to sell it on a "as-is-where-is-basis"; and the third idea is to bring about a merger with another bank.

Banking sources expected the third formula to be favoured, particularly that is could also help streamline another bank, the Syrian Jordanian Bank, which, as one source put it, "has not exactly been able to realise the objectives for which it has been created."

The source noted that Hisham Safadi, director-general of the Syrian Jordanian Bank, has been appointed member of the new management board of the Jordan Gulf Bank and that it could be taken as one sign of a possible merger between the two banks.

But, a senior official at the Jordanian Syrian Bank said, "it is only an idea; nothing has really been discussed or finalised."

The four other members of the new Jordan Gulf board were also on the interim committee which ran Petra Bank as well as Jordan Gulf since their take-over in August. They are: Walid Asfour, Jawad Al Anani (both former ministers), Walid Khairallah (general manager of Jordan Gulf) and Ahmad Abdul Fatah (head of the CBJ's banks control department). None of them could be reached for comment Saturday.

The JD 2 million capital Syrian Jordanian Bank was set up in 1979 and it started operations in mid-1980, mainly devoted to catering to the banking needs of joint Jordanian-Syrian joint ventures. Two of its present major clients are the Syrian-Jordanian Industries Company and the Syrian-Jordanian Land Transport Company — both set up under bilateral cooperation agreements.

"We have several other major Jordanian clients," said an official at the bank who refused to be identified.

The capital of the bank is equally shared between Jordan and Syria and "contrary to reports, Syria has paid most of its capital share," said the official.

Banking and official sources said one of the main problems that impeded the work of the Syrian Jordanian Bank was the absence of a branch in Damascus. According to an economist familiar with Syrian banking, legislation in force in Syria "does not allow for the opening of any branch of a commercial bank other than those owned by the government."

The Syrian Jordanian Bank is registered in Jordan as a commercial bank. It has only one branch, located in Amman and employs around two dozen staff members.

One banking source said the "main or perhaps the sole problem in a merger between the Jordan Gulf Bank and the Syrian Jordanian Bank is how to tackle the Syrian content in the Syrian Jordanian Bank. Once this aspect is handled, the rest should be a smooth, easy process."

Nabulsi, announcing the move to transfer all accounts and deposits of Petra Bank to the Housing Bank as the first step towards liquidating the troubled institution, said the new panel running the affairs of the Jordan Gulf Bank would work in full coordination with the CBJ and "ensure that it is run on solid foundations" pending a final decision on the future of the bank.

Some banking sources said private investors from the Gulf may be interested in acquiring Jordan Gulf, if only because its banking licence will be part of the deal in light of an assertion by the CBJ that no new banks will be licensed in Jordan.

In the meantime, Jordan Gulf employees are hoping that their jobs will not be jeopardised no matter what shape or form the bank assumes.

"We have been informed that we will not lose our jobs whether the bank is merged with another or is sold to another," said an employee in the clearing department of the bank. "We hope the promise will be honoured."

ILO statistics show precarious jobs rising

GENEVA (R) — More people in Western Europe than ever before are working in part-time or temporary jobs, without pensions or social security benefits, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) has said.

The so-called precarious jobs, including work at home and self-employment, steadily eroded stable wage employment in many countries during the 1970s and 1980s, it said in a report.

The most recent statistics, for 1985, put the Netherlands at the top of the list, with 22.6 per cent of all wage employment classed as part-time, followed by Britain with 21.8 per cent.

West Germany had 12.3 per cent, France 10.5 per cent and Belgium 9.3 per cent.

The share of women in part-time employment ranged from 51 per cent in the Netherlands to 21 per cent in France.

High unemployment had weakened the position of job-seekers, making it possible for employers to offer less attractive terms, the ILO said. "Growth of precarious jobs can thus be directly linked to rising unemployment."

It noted that labour inspection services had not grown or been strengthened in the same proportion as precarious work had developed, "even though it is widely admitted that this form of employment is highly vulnerable to abuse."

The trend also had drawbacks for employers, the ILO said. Insecure short-term workers were not highly productive and their motivation was likely to be weak.

Privatisation bill takes Poland down capitalist road

WARSAW (R) — Poland took a giant new step down the road from communism to capitalism Friday when the lower house of parliament approved a bill to privatise the economy and hand out free shares to every adult Pole.

Ex-communists and the allies, who control 65 per cent of the Sejm (lower house) seats, joined forces with Solidarity in voting to dismantle the state-controlled economy they built up over 45 years.

The vote on the long-awaited law "on privatising state enterprises" — the centrepiece of the government's ambitious economic restructuring plans — was an overwhelming 328 to two with 39 abstentions.

The Sejm voted separately to create a ministry of ownership transformation to take charge of the privatisation process.

Both measures must still pass the Solidarity-controlled Senate (upper house) but Finance Minister Leszek Balcerowicz told the Sejm Thursday the government wanted to privatise the economy faster than any other country.

The vote was a boost for the beleaguered government of Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki after three months' wrangling over the bill in commission.

It switches the emphasis of the government's activity to economic restructuring after six months of austerity that has curbed hyperinflation but caused hardship by slashing output and real incomes 30 per cent and creating 570,000 jobless.

The labour ministry said Thursday unemployment soared 125,000 in June to 570,000 or 4.2 per cent of the work force. Only 9,000 people were jobless in December.

Under the privatisation law the government will start selling off the 7,600 state enterprises that comprise 80 per cent of the Polish economy and give everyone a free slice of the capitalist pie.

Enterprises selected for privatisation will be transformed into treasury corporations whose shares will be sold to the public within two years.

To ensure broad public involvement and overcome Poles' chronic lack of capital the government will give every adult a privatisation coupon exchangeable for free shares in a company of their choice. The value of these shares has not yet been fixed.

Balcerowicz did not spell out the exact pace of privatisation but figures published last month by the government privatisation office said up to 340 enterprises could be transformed into private companies or liquidated and their assets sold piecemeal in the first year.

It said 12 enterprises employing 48,000 people were targeted for the first phase and the government hoped to complete the sale of 40 companies by next July.

In addition, 200-300 companies with up to 50,000 employees would be liquidated and their assets sold off at the same time.

The bill gives parliament the right to decide the broad lines of each year's privatisation programme but the government will decide the details. The Sejm rejected a proposal to let parliament choose the firms to be privatised.

Workers will be assured a considerable stake in privatised companies. Staff of a privatised firm will be able to buy up to 20 per cent of their company's shares at half price with each employee able to invest a year's salary.

Foreigners will have the right to buy 10 per cent of a private company's shares and will need official authorisation to exceed this.

Meanwhile, Poland's industrial production fell nearly 30 per cent in the first half of the year as the Solidarity-led government paid the price for implementing Western-style reforms, official figures showed.

A report by the main statistical office (GUS) said industrial production, at 38.8 trillion zlotys ($4.09 billion) was 28.7 per cent down in real terms on the same period last year.

The drop included falls of 37.4 per cent in sales by the food industry and more than 40 per cent in sales of light industrial goods. GUS issues only industrial sales figures and does not give actual production statistics.

Recession has been the price of the government's drive to stamp out hyperinflation, eliminate subsidies and create a Western-style free market.

The GUS report, covering the six months since economic austerity measures were introduced Jan. 1, confirmed that sharply reduced domestic demand had forced Poland to sell more goods abroad and import less.

Kuwait, UAE cut oil output

ABU DHABI (R) — Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) have started to cut oil output to push up prices and heal a rift, within OPEC that threatened to sink a group meeting in Geneva later this month.

UAE Oil Minister Mana Said Al Oteibi confirmed Friday that his country had accepted an OPEC output quota of 1.5 million barrels per day (b/d), although he said it was too low.

"We accepted this quota because we want to end once and for all the rifts that have ravaged OPEC and create a healthy atmosphere, to reach a unanimous decision for the first time in eight years on production and quotas," he told reporters.

The UAE has repeatedly demanded two million b/d and has ignored the OPEC quota system since last November when it was offered what it viewed as a decisory 1.095 million limit.

Saudi Oil Minister Hisham Nazer said Thursday the breakthrough came in a telephone call between Saudi King Fahd and UAE Minister Zaid Ibn Sultan Al Nahayan.

Standing in Abu Dhabi next to the visiting oil minister from Iran, which had joined former war foe Iraq in accusing the UAE and Kuwait of undermining world oil prices, Oteibi set the seal on an agreement which has been forming over the past week.

"The UAE will start immediately enforcing the decision which will have further positive effects on the market. I can say that the road to Geneva is now safe," he said.

In New York, August crude oil futures topped $19 a barrel, above the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) $18 target price, and on the way to recouping all this year's losses from $21.

Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Azgash said: "It is an important message by Kuwait and the UAE to the markets. We will go to Geneva with a total OPEC output ceiling of 22.5 million b/d."

He said Kuwait and the UAE would knock around one million b/d off their production.

Both countries together were producing about four million b/d at their peak earlier this year, compared with a combined three million quota under the new agreement.

Fed signals lower U.S. costs

Interest rates go up for Third World

WASHINGTON (Agencies) — Interest rates on loans to Third World countries will rise effective Sunday by 0.9 percentage point, the U.S. government's Export-Import (Exim) Bank announced Friday.

The increase, the first in two years, is the result of an agreement among 22 industrial countries. Their governments' all subsidise loans to encourage sales of their products in the Third World. The agreement on interest rates is designed to prevent the leading governments from bidding against one another for business by offering larger subsidies to borrowers in the form of lower interest.

Subsidies are paid eventually by taxpayers of the lending countries.

Lending governments sometimes break the agreement by offering lower than agreed rates, using low-interest funds appropriated originally as foreign aid.

Borrowers are often required to use the money for purchases in the lending country. The U.S. government has long tried to discourage such "tied aid" but has begun to offer it in recent years after American businesses complained that they were losing out in competition with Japan, France and other countries.

Borrowing countries are classified on the basis of national income, as calculated by the World Bank for 1979. Countries with average incomes of less than $680 in that year will have to pay 9.2 per cent a year on loans instead of 8.3 per cent.

Countries with average incomes between $680 and $4,000 will pay 10.05 per cent instead of 9.15 per cent for loans of two to five years, and 10.55 per cent instead of 9.65 for loans with longer repayment periods.

Rates are reviewed each January and July. They are based on a weighted average of commercial interest rates in major financial centres.

For countries with higher incomes, the rates charged are close to those available to borrowers from private sources when the loans is for two to five years. For longer loans, the government banks will only offer to guarantee private loans — which lowers the rate somewhat for the borrower.

There are special rates for the export of commercial jet planes and nuclear power plants.

Meanwhile the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) sent interest rates lower Friday, relaxing credit for the first time in seven months and giving the weakening American economy a long-awaited nudge.

Investors enthusiastically welcomed the move to easier credit, pushing Wall Street's best-known share index, the Dow Jones industrial average, through the 3,000 mark for the first time. The 30-share index later slid to close just 10.40 points up at 2,980.20.

"This has got to get an awful lot of people into the market," said Dale Tills, manager of institutional equities at Charles Schwab and Co. "It's really positive."

The move to lower interest rates came just a day after Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan surprised economists by telling Congress that the central bank may ease its monetary policy to stave off a growing credit crunch.

President George Bush was pleased at the move to lower rates. He had been urging the independent Federal Reserve to ease credit to help stave off a possible recession after nearly eight years of virtually uninterrupted economic growth.

While the Federal Reserve never discloses why it intervenes in the money markets, economists said Friday's action was a clear signal of lower rates.

"Yesterday Greenspan said the Fed was going to ease. Today it did," said Ward McCarthy, managing director at Stone and McCarthy Research Associates Inc.

The Federal Reserve signalled its clear desire to ease credit through a technical operation in the money markets. It aggressively pumped money into the economy by purchasing U.S. government securities, providing fresh capital for banks to expand their loans and lower the cost of borrowing for their clients.

The action — one of many levers the central bank uses to influence interest rates in the economy — pushed down the closely watched federal funds rate to eight per cent from the previous target level of 8.25 per cent.

The dollar weakened on the prospect of lower interest rates. Higher rates strengthen the dollar by drawing in foreign investment.

The stock market had been in a holding pattern since its strong spring rally. As evidence has mounted of a weakening in the economy, investors had waited for a sign that the central bank, which controls the money supply, would move to ease credit. Easier credit is good for business and means there are more funds available for people to buy shares.

LA SEMAINE DE

Suleiman Sweiss

Liberté... Libertés!

Je ne cesse pas de le dire à mes amis: Je porte une estime profonde, voire une admiration pour la Révolution française qui vient de fêter son 201^e anniversaire. L'année dernière j'ai eu l'occasion, le 14 juillet, de voir les Français fêter le bicentenaire de la Révolution, place de la Bastille. Les jours et les semaines se sont succédés et je croyais que l'année 1989 ne connaîtrait pas de développements particuliers bien qu'elle arrive deux siècles après 1789! Le séisme politique qui a ravagé les pays de l'Europe de l'Est, les trois derniers mois de l'année dernière, a bien prouvé que les idéaux de 1789 sont toujours vivants.

La semaine dernière encore, le 26^e sommet de l'Organisation de l'Unité Africaine a adopté une résolution principale réaffirmant que «la démocratie doit être adoptée partout en Afrique».

Où en est la situation des libertés dans notre pays? Il est certain qu'on ne peut pas faire le tour d'un sujet aussi vaste en quelques lignes ou en quelques pages. Nous prenons comme point d'appui l'interview que le député Ahmed Al-Azaydeh, président de la commission des libertés publiques au sein de la chambre des députés a accordée à notre confrère «Al-Dustour» le 13 juin dernier. Il a parlé des «nombreuses difficultés» que la commission a rencontrées dans son travail. Il affirme que «la plupart des administrations n'appliquent pas les directives gouvernementales dans le domaine de la réintégration des fonctionnaires démis de leur postes pour des raisons politiques. Il dénonce la «grande lenteur» avec laquelle on applique les mesures concernant les libertés publiques.

Ces sont quelques déclarations prononcées par M. Al-Azaydeh. Certes, cela ne veut pas dire que rien n'a été réalisé depuis novembre dernier. Nous avions l'occasion d'en évoquer précédemment. Mais l'amerlume qui se cache derrière les propos du député s'explique par le fait que le progrès réalisé au niveau des libertés a été très limité et incertain. De plus les promesses faites par le gouvernement début janvier n'ont pas encore été tenues. A titre d'exemple, une promesse a été faite au parlement et au peuple selon laquelle les «lois martiales seront levées dans quatre à six mois». Le délai est expiré et le gel des lois martiales n'a pas été remplacé par une annulation de ces lois. Durant les mois précédents une trentaine de livres se sont vu interdits d'entrée dans le pays, dont un sur la crise de l'économie jordanienne.

Qu'avons nous fait pour supprimer l'immunité des décisions administratives du gouvernement, réforme indispensable pour rendre justice à des milliers de citoyens? Quelles sont les garanties accordées pour protéger les droits et les libertés des citoyens contre la violation des droits de l'homme?

Les citoyens comprennent que la solution des problèmes économiques prenne du temps. Mais, comment expliquer la lenteur dont parle M. Al-Azaydeh dans le domaine des libertés? Oui, nous jouissons de plus de liberté qu'avant novembre 1989, mais celle-ci n'est pas encore codifiée ni garantie définitivement. Certains rapports publiés récemment sur la situation des droits de l'homme en Jordanie nous font réfléchir plus.

Je n'arrive pas à imaginer que la levée des lois martiales soit si compliquée et épineuse qu'on ne soit pas arrivé à la réaliser dans le délai des six mois promis par le premier ministre le 2 janvier dernier, devant les députés. Cela m'entraîne à me rappeler de la facilité et de la rapidité avec lesquelles on a décrété ces mêmes lois martiales, le 5 juin 1967.

Bref, il est temps d'attirer l'attention sur les effets négatifs qu'entraîne le piétement de la situation des libertés chez nous. Déjà, certains milieux constatent peut-être hâtivement que le changement qui a eu lieu depuis l'automne dernier est de pure forme. Il n'y a pas encore de raisons valables pour être si pessimiste. Nous croyons résolument que le processus de démocratisation en cours est irréversible. Il faut toujours savoir défendre la démocratie. Celle-ci a toujours des ennemis, comme elle a toujours des amis.

France-Jordanie : plus solidaires que jamais

A l'occasion de la fête nationale française, Le Jourdain dresse l'état des lieux des relations franco-jordaniennes: malgré un contexte difficile, elles sont au beau fixe.

Contre mauvaise fortune, bon cœur. C'est un peu l'esprit des relations franco-jordaniennes ces derniers temps.

La Jordanie est plongée dans une crise économique importante marquée par un des endettements les plus importants du monde (350% du PNB) et par la récente dévaluation du dinar. Côté français, l'attentat d'un individu illuminé contre deux autocars de touristes à Amman, le 21 mai dernier, a provoqué une émotion certaine sur le moment. Mais ces événements n'ont en rien entaché les relations économiques, culturelles et politiques entre les deux pays. Ils semblent même les avoir renforcés dans une certaine mesure.

La France a été très sensible à la solidarité et à la compassion des autorités et du peuple jordanien, qui ont tous condamné unanimement l'attentat et ont aidé l'Ambassade de France à ramener cette affaire aux proportions qu'elle méritait: celle d'un acte isolé sans aucune signification idéologique ou politique. Le roi Hussein a témoigné sa sympathie et celle de son peuple envers les malheureux touristes et les Français en général.

La politique française au Moyen Orient reçoit un accueil favorable des autorités d'Amman. On apprécie ici les prises de position de la France en faveur du droit du peuple palestinien à disposer d'un territoire. La politique française de dialogue avec l'OLP, caractérisée notamment par la rencontre entre le président François Mitterrand et Yasser Arafat à Paris, le 2 mai 1989, témoignent de l'intérêt porté par la France au sort du peuple palestinien. Signe des bonnes relations entre la France et la Jordanie, les fréquentes visites officielles ou privées du Roi Hussein à Paris qui prennent la forme de véritables réunions de travail efficaces et constructives. Depuis 1985, il ne s'est pas passé une année sans que sa Majesté ne rencontre le président Mitterrand à Paris. En sens inverse, François Mitterrand a effectué une visite officielle à Amman en juillet 1984 et de nombreuses visites de ministres ou hauts responsables français sont venues entretenir les relations franco-jordaniennes. La

Le Centre Culturel Français a été créé en 1964. Il reçoit des subventions du service culturel et vend des cours de français. Il a de ce fait une certaine autonomie financière, mais dépend de l'Ambassade de France. Le C.C.F. a commencé par une activité cinématographique, l'apprentissage de la langue française, et a organisé des expositions pour des artistes jordaniens. On y trouve une bibliothèque de 15.000 livres. Une semaine du film français a lieu chaque année, en présence des réalisateurs et acteurs des films projetés. Tous les lundis plusieurs personnes, membres ou non, se rassemblent à 18h au C.C.F. pour une table ronde. Elles conversent en français à propos de science, culture, art... dans le but d'améliorer leur pratique. Au premier étage une discothèque mise à la disposition des membres prête des bandes vidéo, des cassettes de musiques et des diapositives. Pour devenir membre du C.C.F. il suffit de payer une somme de 5JD qui sera rendue en cas d'annulation de l'abonnement.

France apprécie le travail du Roi Hussein pour la stabilité politique du Moyen-Orient et le Roi Hussein entretient de bonnes relations avec la France pour diversifier ses appuis dans le monde européen, au delà des liens historiques qui unissent son pays à la Grande-Bretagne.

Le symbole de cette amitié franco-jordanienne devrait être, en novembre à Amman, la célébration du centenaire du général de Gaulle sous le parrainage du Roi Hussein.

Au delà des relations politiques, la communication entre les deux peuples par le biais d'échanges linguistiques, culturels et scientifiques ne cesse de se développer, malgré l'austérité budgétaire qui n'a pas permis d'accroître le budget de la coopération française dans ce domaine. L'Etat français consacre 10 millions de francs cette année, comme l'an dernier à la coopération. La moitié de ce budget est affectée à l'aide scientifique et technique, avec des projets dans les domaines agricole, piscicole, électronique... A Aqaba, les phases d'études pour la création d'un élevage de bars (alors que la Jordanie importe la quasi-totalité du poisson qu'elle consomme) sont en train de s'achever avec l'assistance de Français et l'on devrait bientôt passer à la phase de la production en vraie grandeur et de la commercialisation.

Ils sont 15.000 dans les écoles et collèges privés, 900 dans le primaire et secondaire public. 250 à l'Université du Yarmouk, 230 à celle de Mota et 15 à l'Université de Jordanie. Il faut y ajouter les 600 élèves qui suivent les cours du Centre Culturel Français. Pour développer cet enseignement, la France fournit des professeurs, des bourses d'étude en France pour les élèves et les professeurs et un bureau d'action linguistique qui offre des conseils et du matériel pédagogique. Pour continuer à développer les séjours d'étudiants jordaniens en France malgré le gel budgétaire, le service culturel français a inauguré l'an dernier un système d'échange d'étudiants entre des universités françaises et les universités jordaniennes. L'été dernier, quatre étudiants français de l'université de Lyon II et quatre étudiants jordaniens de l'université du Yarmouk ont échangé leur place tous frais (sauf le voyage) payés par l'université d'accueil. Cette année ils seront six de part et d'autre à faire cet échange et d'autres accords de ce type sont en vue entre un lycée technique et commercial de Strasbourg ou l'Ecole des langues orientales de Paris d'une part et les universités du Yarmouk ou de Jordanie d'autre part.

Les relations économiques entre la Jordanie et la France auraient pu souffrir de la crise économique jordanienne. De fait la commission mixte chargée de travailler à développer les échanges économiques franco-jordaniens -prévue dans un accord commercial publié au Journal Officiel français il y a tout juste un an, le 14 juillet 1989- n'a toujours pas tenu sa première réunion. Pourtant, les ventes de produits jordaniens à la France et de produits français à la Jordanie n'ont cessé de s'accroître: ils se montent à 104.000F dans le premier cas (73% par rapport à 1988) et à 2,1 millions de F dans le second (40%). La Jordanie exporte des phosphates, de la potasse, des engrais chimiques et des fruits et légumes de contre-saison. La France exporte des produits agro-alimentaires (notamment du sucre et du poulet) ainsi que des produits pharmaceutiques, entre autres.

Malgré la crise, la Jordanie a acheté à la France six Airbus A310. Elle a également commandé six A320 dont deux ont déjà été livrés, et cinq A340 dont les livraisons commenceront à partir de 1995. Récemment, la Compagnie Royal Jordanian a acheté deux simulateurs de vol électroniques au groupe français Thomson. Elle les utilise pour la formation de ses propres pilotes mais elle les loue aussi pour celle des pilotes de compagnies étrangères, y compris Air-France, qui viennent donc à Amman accomplir leurs stages lorsque les simulateurs nationaux sont saturés.

Les vols réguliers qui relient plusieurs fois par semaine Amman à Paris symbolisent bien les liens et la communication entre les peuples qui unissent la Jordanie à la France. En 1989, 15.610 Français sont entrés en Jordanie soit 26% de plus qu'en 1988. Nous sommes encore derrière les Allemands, les Italiens et les Anglais, mais la progression montre bien que les Français sont de plus en plus nombreux à apprécier la chaleur et l'accueil du peuple jordanien.

EN BREF

CEE-Aide. La CEE va accorder une aide non remboursable d'un montant de 1.8 millions d'ECUs (2 millions de dollars) à la Jordanie. Cette somme est destinée à soutenir la politique d'éducation jordanienne par un programme triennal d'assistance technique et de formation à l'étranger.

Défense. La confrérie des Frères musulmans, qui dispose du quart des 80 sièges de la chambre des députés jordanienne, a appelé le gouvernement jordanien à entraîner les citoyens et à les armer afin de faire face à Israël. La confrérie réclame également l'annulation du festival de Jérusalem, qui a débuté mercredi et doit se terminer le 27 juillet, invitant les Jordaniens à le boycotter car elle estime que son maintien «représente un comportement désinvolte par rapport aux défis auxquels nous faisons face».

Islamistes. Les municipalités de la côte oranaise, dans l'ouest de l'Algérie, seront désormais privées de musique Raï, les nouveaux responsables communaux du Front Islamique de Salut (FIS) ayant décidé de «supprimer toutes les activités culturelles n'ayant aucune répercussion bénéfique sur la vie des citoyens» de la région. A la place de cette musique contestataire de «Chebs» (jeunes) chantant l'amour de la femme, le spleen et la révolte des jeunes défavorisés au sein de la société algérienne, les nouvelles autorités municipales cherchent à promouvoir une autre musique, la «Ounouchda al-Watania al-Islamiya» (chanson patriotique islamique).

Pétrole. Les cinq pays arabes du Golfe membres de l'OPEP (Arabie Saoudite, Irak, Koweït, Emirats Arabes Unis et Qatar) ont décidé d'accorder désormais la priorité au réajustement du prix du brut. Bagdad envisage même la possibilité d'une coordination directe avec l'Iran dans le domaine pétrolier, après des années de conflit entre les deux pays. Cette décision des cinq pays qui assurent près de 60% de la production de l'OPEP, est le résultat d'une série de tractations difficiles menées depuis plusieurs semaines.

Sommet. Les sept pays les plus industrialisés de l'Occident ont reconnu, à l'issue de leur sommet à Houston (USA), la nécessité d'effectuer «des réductions substantielles et progressives du soutien et de la protection» de leurs agricultures. Les sept ont par ailleurs demandé à plusieurs organisations internationales d'effectuer une étude des besoins d'assistance de l'URSS, en consultation étroite avec la Commission des communautés européennes.

URSS. Boris Eltsine, président de la fédération de Russie, a annoncé jeudi soir devant le 28^e Congrès du Parti Communiste d'Union Soviétique (PCUS), qu'il quitterait le parti communiste. «Dans le cadre du passage de la société au multipartisme et de mes obligations en tant que président de la fédération de Russie, a-t-il indiqué, je ne peux accepter la candidature au comité central du PCUS et je demande à quitter le parti pour avoir d'avantage de possibilités de mener une action efficace et montrer ma disponibilité à travailler en collaboration avec tous les autres partis et organisations sociales.»

Déficit. La valeur des importations soviétiques a dépassé en 1989 celle des exportations de l'URSS de 3.3 milliards de roubles (5.2 milliards de dollars), pour la première fois depuis 1976. Les importations soviétiques ont augmenté de 7.1 milliards de roubles (11.3 milliards de dollars) par rapport à 1988. Il s'agit principalement de biens de consommation.

Albanais. Dix jours après s'être réfugiés dans les missions diplomatiques d'Italie, de RFA et de France dans la capitale albanaise, environ 4.000 Albanais ont pris depuis jeudi le chemin de l'exil, à la faveur d'une importante opération d'évacuation par mer vers l'Italie et vers la France. Toutes les dispositions ont été prises pour les accueillir en France. Une fois installés, lavés, nourris, reposés et habillés de neuf, ils devront remplir les premières formalités pour leur installation en France. Et tenter de s'habituer à leur nouvelle existence de liberté et d'exil.

Cubains. Un Cubain âgé de 27 ans s'est réfugié mercredi soir à l'Ambassade d'Espagne à La Havane pour demander l'asile politique dans un pays occidental. Ce nouveau réfugié porte à quinze le nombre total de Cubains actuellement réfugiés dans des représentations étrangères à La Havane. Quatorze se sont en effet réfugiés dans l'Ambassade de Tchécoslovaquie, dont sept depuis lundi.

Rideau. Une petite fleur de culture française va s'éteindre à New-York: le cinéma «Paris», qui projetait depuis 42 ans principalement des films francophones, va devoir fermer ses portes faute d'avoir pu s'entendre avec son propriétaire pour le renouvellement du bail. Construit par la compagnie française Pathé en 1948 au cœur de Manhattan, à deux pas de l'hôtel Plaza, ce cinéma d'art et d'essai fermait à la fin août. Le Paris, qui projetait actuellement «Les enfants du Paradis», avait été inauguré par la grande actrice Marlene Dietrich.

Johnny. Le chanteur de rock français, Johnny Halliday, a épousé lundi en troisième noce, à l'âge de 47 ans, une jeune femme de 19 ans, Adeline Blondieau, devant des personnalités du show business et plusieurs milliers d'admirateurs en délire. Après le traditionnel «Oui», prononcé timidement par Johnny, et de façon plus appuyée par Adeline, visiblement moins impressionnée, les mariés ont été ovationnés par plus de 3.000 fans massés de part et d'autre de la mairie de Ramatuelle.

Aqaba

Escale jordanienne de la Marine française

Pompon rouge, col bleu et pantalon blanc, vous les avez peut-être croisés, la semaine dernière, dans les rues d'Aqaba ou d'Amman. Ce sont les marins du «Marnes» et du «Commandant Ducuing», deux navires militaires français venus faire escale pour quatre jours dans le port d'Aqaba.

Immense bâtiment de 18.000 tonnes, le «Marnes» a l'envergure et la bonhomie d'un bon père de famille. C'en est un en quelque sorte. C'est lui qui nourrit la flotte de l'Océan indien, la ravitaillant régulièrement en vivres, en carburant et en munitions. C'est lui aussi qui incarne l'autorité sur l'ensemble de cette flotte puisque, en plus de ses fonctions de ravitailleur, il présente la particularité d'accueillir en permanence à son bord le commandement général des forces maritimes de l'Océan indien avec tout son Etat-Major.

Ce cas unique de cohabitation s'explique par le fait que l'Océan indien est la seule zone maritime où la France n'avait pas d'installations terrestres où puisse s'établir un poste de commandement. Plutôt que d'en construire un de toute pièce, on a donc préféré l'installer sur le ravitailleur, moyennant quelques aménagements.

«Ce qui compte pour exercer le commandement», explique l'Amiral Pierre Bonnot, c'est d'avoir de bonnes liaisons avec les bateaux que l'on commande et avec les autorités de métropole. Dès lors que ces liaisons sont bonnes et elles le sont-elles, en déplacement permanent sur notre zone. Via satellite, en effet, le bateau est en liaison constante avec la France, ce qui se fait par téléphone, fac-simile ou télex.

Pour approvisionner tous ses bateaux, le ravitailleur «Marnes» fait lui-même le plein de ses immenses soutes, tous les deux mois environ, à Djibouti son port d'attache. Il y reçoit des conteneurs de vivres acheminés depuis la France par avion. Il remplit ses cuves d'eau et de pétrole... Et le voilà reparti pour deux mois de mer, à la disposition de tous les bateaux militaires (français ou alliés) qui souhaitent faire appel à lui.

Le «Marnes» peut ravitailler jusqu'à trois bâtiments simultanément, l'un à babord, l'autre à tribord et le dernier à l'arrière. Lorsque les quatre bateaux sont en place et avancent à la même vitesse dans la même direction, le ravitailleur large de gros tubes de caoutchouc que les ravitailles adaptent sur leurs propres soutes. Les liquides passent alors automatiquement d'un réservoir à l'autre à un débit de 600m³ à l'heure. Transportant des matières inflammables, le «Marnes» est équipé d'un système de sécurité qui remplit, au fur et à mesure, le vide qui se fait dans ses cuves avec du CO2 pour éviter le contact explosif du pétrole restant avec l'air.

Toutes ces machineries, toutes ces fonctions (conduite du bateau, ravitaillement, commandement...) nécessitent un équipage important. Deux-cents personnes vivent en permanence sur le «Marnes», qui prend de ce fait des allures de ville flottante. Sur ce que les marins surnomment eux-mêmes la «place du village», au coeur du bateau, on trouve un salon de coiffure, un bureau de poste, un «cinéma» (en fait, une salle vidéo) et une «mairie» (le service administratif qui se charge de toutes les formalités des marins). Le navire a ses cuisiniers, son boulanger, ses électriciens, sa blanchisserie. Il dispose même d'un hôpital, avec un chirurgien et un docteur, dont peuvent bénéficier les malades graves de n'importe quel bateau, qui sont acheminés d'urgence par l'hélicoptère du «Marnes», passager permanent, lui aussi, avec son pilote et ses mécaniciens.

Doté d'un studio de télévision, le bateau confectionne lui-même son propre journal télévisé, avec des nouvelles du bord et du monde entier, grâce aux dépêches de l'AFP reçues en temps réel. Il y a même un jeu télévisé fait sur place, des documentaires et des films tous les soirs.

Complément indispensable du ravitailleur, qui n'est pas équipé pour se défendre seul, l'avisos escorte fait office, en quelque sorte, de garde du corps, bardé d'armements divers. Ils sont trois dans l'Océan indien, qui escortent le «Marnes» à tour de rôle.

Le «Commandant Ducuing» est celui qui accompagne le «Marnes» à Aqaba. Là, l'espace est réduit et rentabilisé au maximum: les 90 hommes de l'équipage vivent dans une promiscuité extrême mais bien acceptée, avec des lits de quatre étages superposés et de petites armoires, d'un mètre de haut sur cinquante centimètres de large et de profondeur, pour ranger leurs affaires personnelles.

L'armement aussi semble à l'étroit sur un si petit bâtiment: une tourelle avec un canon de 100mm pour riposter en cas d'attaque aérienne, deux lanceurs de missiles mer-mer et deux lance-torpilles de chaque côté du bateau. A quoi s'ajoute une série de radars et de sonars détectant avions, bateaux et sous-marins des environs, qui sont représentés automatiquement sur une table traçante électronique.

Un univers passionnant pour tous ceux qui ont en la chance de visiter ces deux bâtiments à l'occasion de leur escale. Un univers auquel les matelots ont été bien contents d'échapper quelques jours pour s'évader à Pétra, à Amman ou dans le Wadi-Rum.

Femmes jordaniennes

Unies pour vivre mieux

Développer les aptitudes des femmes, mettre en place des comités qui les représentent dans les réunions locales, arabes et internationales, leur faciliter la vie de tous les jours, c'est la mission que s'est donnée l'Union des femmes jordaniennes. Après un peu moins de dix ans de fonctionnement, l'association connaît un franc succès.

Fondée en 1981, l'Union des femmes est une organisation féminine qui réunit des associations, des clubs, des institutions sociales et des membres libres.

Elle offre, dans vingt-cinq centres en Jordanie, des services aux femmes dans le but d'améliorer leur situation économique, sociale et professionnelle, ainsi que des programmes destinés à la formation des femmes non qualifiées. Le but de ces programmes est d'encourager l'apprentissage du travail manuel, artisanal et traditionnel. Ces centres se consacrent notamment à la broderie folklorique et populaire, au tissage sur métiers à tisser, à la couture, à la coupe des habits, à la dactylographie en arabe et en anglais, à l'apprentissage du maquillage, de la coiffure. Ces centres comprennent aussi des cours d'alphabétisation.

35 associations, six clubs et quelques milliers de membres libres de toutes les régions du royaume adhèrent à cette union, dont les bureaux administratifs se trouvent à Amman, mais qui a des succursales à Irbid, Zarqa, Aqaba, Balka, Karak, Tafila et Mafraq.

Pour servir la femme, l'union a mis en place, en 1989, un projet de production alimentaire. A l'origine, il s'agissait d'une simple cuisine dans laquelle travaillaient deux ouvrières. Avec l'aide financière de l'Organisation économique de l'Ouest asiatique (l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ASCO) et l'aide de l'Union des femmes jordaniennes, ce Projet de Production Alimentaire (PPA) présente aujourd'hui des repas tout prêts à des prix raisonnables, pour les femmes qui travaillent.

Cet organisme ne recherche pas le profit. Son but est d'assurer de l'emploi à plusieurs femmes, de constituer une caisse de crédit pour aider les femmes pauvres à réaliser de petites entreprises productives et d'augmenter les revenus de l'Union pour l'aider à accomplir d'autres missions.

Huit personnes sont employées à temps plein, de 8h à 14h au PPA: la directrice, une comptable, trois cuisinières, deux ouvrières et un chauffeur. Leurs produits se vendent bien, aux hommes comme aux femmes. Les ventes ont crû de 30% environ depuis le démarrage du projet grâce au soin apporté à la propreté de la préparation et à la qualité des produits utilisés.

Le PPA accueille des femmes qui souhaitent se renseigner sur la manière de confectionner les 17 plats qu'il propose, du Koubba à 150 Fils au Chichbarak à 2,5JD les 100, en passant par la tourte à la viande, aux épinards et au thym (10 Fils, la part) ou la pizza (120 Fils).

Sur commande, on peut aussi demander au PPA plusieurs types de plats. Des productions cuisinées à réchauffer, ou congelées pour être ressorties le jour venu.

Pour se procurer les plats du PPA, il suffit de téléphoner au 670 325. Vous ferez ainsi une bonne action en faveur des femmes jordaniennes.

Jazz à Jerash

Un maître à quatre mailloches

Bien qu'il ait la même forme, qu'il soit construit sur les mêmes principes, et que ses lames répondent à des coups de baguette identiques, le vibraphone dont Gary Burton jouera les 15 et 16 juillet à Jerash, est bien plus qu'un xylophone amélioré. Fait de métal et de bois, cet instrument de percussion inventé en 1920 aux Etats-Unis est un vrai enfant du 20e siècle. Ses résonances sont réglées par un système électro-mécanique. Il exige une agilité de jeu à couper le souffle.

Gary Burton au titre de maître contemporain du vibraphone joue depuis une trentaine d'années. Il avait dix-sept ans quand il commença; il est âgé de 46 ans aujourd'hui. Fêté par les critiques de jazz, il a fait plus que faire preuve de virtuosité pour valoir leurs éloges. Il a accompli un pas sans précédent à l'égard de cet instrument: il l'a transformé d'instrument de percussion en instrument de mélodie.

Ce fut un grand bond, au cours de son intégration dans les jazz-bands, le vibraphone a connu des maîtres (Lionel Hampton, Red Norvo, Milt Jackson) mais c'est grâce à une prodigieuse technique que Burton a pu amplifier les ressources musicales de l'instrument. Un emploi simultané de quatre mailloches au lieu des deux baguettes traditionnelles l'a mené à la création d'harmonies insolites.

Châliné par Burton, le vibraphone offre les mêmes richesses qu'un piano. Cette façon originale d'en jouer remonte à ses débuts musicaux.

Bill Evans, pianiste novateur des années 1950, l'évéilla à une conception pianistique de l'instrument. Ce seront des roulettes lentes que Burton révélera dans son vibraphone. Quant à son raffinement mélodique, il le doit au stage (1964-1966) qu'il avait fait avec le grand sax, Stan Getz.

A Jerash, Burton jouera avec le groupe qu'il a formé l'année dernière, The Gary Burton Quintet. Tandis que la batterie de Martin Richards et la basse de Larry Grenadier se limiteront au rôle traditionnel de pulseurs de rythme, le vibraphone de Burton entreprendra des dialogues harmoniques avec deux instruments de mélodie, la guitare de Wolfgang Muthspiel et le sax ténor de Don McCaslin. Parmi leurs mélodies, ils interpréteront des compositions d'un ancien du groupe, la superstar du jazz rock, Pat Metheny. Que ce dernier soit au programme de Burton va sans dire, car le style jazz-rock porte la signature de Burton, qui fut, en 1967, le devancier de ce mouvement des années 70, quand il ajouta à ses compositions de jazz des éléments de country et de rock, remarquant qu'ils avaient tous des racines communes dans l'histoire de la musique afro-américaine.

Pour ceux à qui le mot jazz-rock évoque une soirée rauque et bruyante, et qui espèrent y participer, mieux vaut qu'ils restent chez eux: ils seront déçus. Le Gary Burton Quintet a un autre dessein, une soirée de grand calme. Rassemblé autour de vibraphoniste scintillant, ce groupe promet que, de son jeu se déchaîneront des mélodies apaisantes à l'extrême.

Des harmonies. Les harmonies d'une soirée d'été.

LE SAVIEZ-VOUS ?

SIESTE. Les pilotes de ligne sont plus en forme pour l'atterrissage après un petit somme, selon une enquête réalisée par la NASA. De brèves périodes de repos font l'effet de «coupapes» contre la fatigue et augmentent la vigilance des pilotes au moment de la phase délicate de descente. Habituellement, seuls les équipages des appareils de transport militaire sont autorisés à prendre des périodes de repos pendant les vols aux Etats-Unis, mais cette pratique a déjà été mise en application par des compagnies aériennes d'autres pays.

COEUR. Un appareil d'assistance cardiaque, jouant le rôle d'un coeur artificiel, a pour la première fois été miniaturisé par une équipe américaine afin de pouvoir être implanté directement dans le corps du patient, lui redonnant son autonomie. Les coeurs artificiels existant jusqu'ici pesaient plus de 150Kg, contre 700g pour ce nouvel appareil.

Lemond, Breukink turn Tour de France upside down

ST ETIENNE, France (R) — A remarkable break-away by last year's Tour de France winner Greg Lemond and Dutch rider Eric Breukink turned this year's race upside down on a sweltering hot day Saturday.

The 13th stage from Villard-de-Lans was expected to be a leisurely 149-kilometre passage from the Alps to the Massif Central over fairly undemanding terrain.

But Lemond, chasing his third Tour victory, had other ideas. Pursued by Breukink, he attacked like a man possessed and finally left the two runaway tour leaders Claudio Chiappucci of Italy and Ronan Pensec of France stranded.

Chiappucci, who took the yellow jersey in Thursday's time trial, trailed in four minutes 53 seconds behind and Pensec saw his chances of overall victory evaporate when he struggled in some seven minutes 47 seconds down.

Chiappucci retained his yellow jersey but found his lead over Breukink slashed from six minutes 55 seconds to just two minutes two seconds.

Lemond lies a most dangerous third, just two minutes 34 seconds behind with Pensec fourth at 4:11 and Pedro Delgado of Spain, the 1988 Tour winner, fifth at 4:39.

Delgado counter-attacked desperately as Lemond and Breukink threatened to go well clear and finally limited the damage to 30 seconds.

The stage was won by Eduardo Chozas of Spain but that was almost a minor detail of the incredible day's racing.

The Spaniard was in a bunch of five, including Lemond and Breukink, who came in together in a time of three hours 20 minutes 12 seconds. Breukink placed second, Andy Hampsten of the United States third. Lemond was fifth behind Roberto Conti of Italy.

Lemond, who barely looked tired after his brilliant ride, said: "I'm happy. After what I did, I hoped for more than 30 seconds on Delgado. I improvised my attack — you can't plan these things."

"Chiappucci had been following me as if he was glued to my wheel. But when I attacked, he wasn't there anymore."

With an uncomfortable ride Sunday through the Massif Central and a daunting cross through the Pyrenees to come Tuesday, Chiappucci's chances of holding off the likes of Breukink, Lemond and Delgado now look very slim.

Pensec, who held the yellow jersey for two days before surrendering it to the Italian, had his final fling in front of large crowds lining the route to celebrate the French national holiday, Bastille Day.

He stormed away on the gentle slopes of the Col d'Ardix and gained one minute 24 seconds on Chiappucci, a margin which would have given him back the race lead.

But it turned out to be his swansong. Lemond and a group of pursuers caught him with 45 kilometres to go and he could not sustain their furious pace on a day when temperatures rose to around 35 degrees Celsius.

The American had a bunch of 13 other riders with him at that stage but one by one they fell back until they were down to five with another small group led by Delgado and Tour of Italy winner Gianni Bugno just behind on the descent into St Etienne.

Lemond's magnificent ride, which brought back memories of his tour-de-force in last year's race, was an apt response to the widespread media criticism of his supposed failure to take the initiative.

Breukink and Delgado will have other ideas but the American is again the rider to beat in the race he has made his own.

For the experienced Chozas, it was a fourth Tour de France stage win. He also won a stage in this year's Tour of Italy and took victory in this season's Ruta Del Sol.

The race continues Sunday with the 14th stage over 205 kilometres from Le Puy-en-Velay to Millau.

Swiss customs officers applaud while the pack of the tour cyclists cross the Swiss border to join Geneva end of the ninth stage.

E. German clubs to join Bundesliga next year

BONN (Agencies) — West Germany's soccer federation has invited East German clubs to join Bundesliga in the 1991-92 season, a year earlier than previously agreed, because of the rapid pace of political unification.

The decision at a meeting in Frankfurt followed pressure from East Germany, which urged a rapid merger to stem a damaging exodus of its best players to wealthy West German clubs.

"Football must now adapt to the more rapid pace of political unification," Federation President Hermann Neuberg said. East German national trainer Eduard Geyer said the move was inevitable and would be widely welcomed in East Germany.

But he added: "I am a bit worried about our coaches. I don't know if the West Germans will want us."

East German League Secretary Volker Nickchen said: "Our league has long held the view that football should not lag behind political developments."

The West German also proposed that East Germany should withdraw from qualifying matches for the 1992 European championships and Olympics.

The East German Federation has already said it might withdraw from the European championships. East Germany is due to play World Cup winners West Germany in a qualifying match in Leipzig on Nov. 21.

The two federations will discuss the future again next Thursday.

Mansell scorches to pole for British Grand Prix

SILVERSTONE, England (R) — Briton Nigel Mansell claimed his second successive pole and 14th of his career Saturday when he clocked the fastest time in final qualifying for the British Grand Prix.

Mansell, driving a Ferrari, lapped the 4.78 kilometre Silverstone Circuit in one minute 07.428 seconds to outstrip overnight leader Ayrton Senna's Friday time by six tenths of a second.

His average speed was 255.192 kph and his lap time was the third fastest recorded on the circuit.

Mansell's performance showed clearly that his Ferrari team had been able to overcome the difficulties they had experienced Friday when his engine was down on power and he angrily left the team garage without a word.

Mansell will share the front row of the grid for Sunday's race with Brazilian Ayrton Senna's McLaren. Senna was unable to improve his time Saturday in the windier and cooler conditions.

Senna's McLaren team mate Gerhard Berger was also unable to produce an improved time. He finished third-quickest overall and shares the second row of the grid with Belgian Thierry Boutsen, driving a Williams.

Mansell's Ferrari team mate Alain Prost improved his time to move up from sixth overnight to fifth. Prost will start alongside his compatriot Jean Alesi who hurled his Ford V-8 powered Tyrrell round the track in remarkable fashion.

Mansell praised the Ferrari team for their efforts in overcoming Friday's problems to give him the power he had hoped for.

He said: "It was one of those laps where you have to give full commitment and even when you do you need everything to be all right."

"When I came to the start-finish line it was a good job I had seat belts on because I almost jumped out of the car. I couldn't believe the time."

"It was probably one of the most special laps of my whole career."

The session, which began late because of a delay during the morning free session caused by an accident involving Italian Stefano Modena's Brabham, was an exciting one right to the finish as the big crowd waited to see if Senna could overhaul Mansell's time.

Norris retains boxing crown

ANNECY, France (R) — American Terry Norris outclassed Frenchman Rene Jacquot to retain his World Boxing Council (WBC) super-welterweight title Friday.

Norris, 23, twice sent his opponent to the canvas in the opening rounds but had to contend in the end with a unanimous points decision over Jacquot.

He was defending a crown won with a first round knock-out of Ugandan John Mugabi in Tampa, Florida, on March 31.

The three judges awarded him between eight and thirteen points more than the Frenchman, a former world champion.

Norris used his superior speed and power to take command of the fight from the start. Two minutes and thirty seconds into the first round, he floored Jacquot with a combination that ended with a savage right hook to the Frenchman's temple.

But the 28-year-old Jacquot was back on his feet before the ten-second count and managed to hold on until the bell.

In the following round, he was caught with a left uppercut that sent him to the floor for the second time. He survived once again and stood up bravely to Norris' onslaught.

From the third round, the challenger succeeded in countering the American with some left and right jabs which delighted the 4,000 home crowd in this Alpine town.

But Jacquot was never in position to follow up his combinations whereas Norris was able to hit him at will.

Even if the Frenchman's blows rarely reached him, the champion took a more cautious approach from the fourth round, allowing Jacquot to hold on until the end.

Norris missed several other opportunities to finish before the limit with a tired Jacquot, who put a knee on the floor in the last round to catch his breath.

Norris, who recorded his 26 win against three defeats, now plans to fight International Boxing Federation Champion Gianfranco Rosi of Italy for a unified super-welterweight world title. Jacquot, whose career record is now of 26 wins for 11 defeats, said before the fight he would retire this year.

"I am obviously disappointed but Norris was too strong for me," he said. "He showed that he deserved his win over Mugabi."

Jacquot briefly held the WBC super-welterweight title last year when he outpointed American Don Curry. He lost his crown to Mugabi in his first defence when he was forced to retire a few seconds into the first round with a sprained ankle.

"It was an easier fight than I expected," said Norris, sitting in a corridor as he waited to pass a doping test.

"I managed to land a lot of clear shots," he said.

"I wasn't too surprised to see him fighting back," he said of his challenger, who managed to stay on his feet after suffering two knock downs in the first two rounds.

"He did display a lot of raw courage," Norris said.

50 nations to compete as Goodwill Games try to break even

SEATTLE (AP) — Jackie Joyner-Kersey tries to break the world heptathlon record, Javier Sotomayor tries to break the eight-foot high-jump barrier again, and the Goodwill Games try to break even.

Against the backdrop of sweeping political change in Eastern Europe and a less curious sports world, the question has become: Can the Goodwill Games survive past 1990?

"It's an interesting question," Pete Cava of the Athletics Congress said. "The answer? It's hard to say."

With the 17-day games scheduled to begin Friday, organisers need to sell more tickets quickly to avoid losing money. The U.S. Cable Television Network that is covering the games — TBS, owned by Goodwill Games innovator Ted Turner — expects to lose as much as $13 million.

"We've had a lot of hurdles, and a lot of skepticism, and a lot of mountains to overcome," Seattle organising committee President Bob Walsh said.

Despite world-class fields that include athletes from the Soviet Union and Cuba as well as the United States, events such as men's basketball and boxing were not sold out in advance.

As of midweek, only slightly more than 700,000 of 1.1 million tickets were sold. That represented about $11 million in sales. Organisers say they need to sell $17 million to break even on the $65-million games.

The Goodwill Games were born after two straight boycotted Olympics — 1980 in Moscow and 1984 in Los Angeles. Not since 1976 in Montreal had East met West in an all-out sports extravaganza... until 1988 in Seoul, that is. So much for curiosity.

This year, the Goodwill Games follow the World Cup, which preoccupied most of Europe all summer. Next time around, in 1994, they'll follow the winter Games in the first biennial of the staggered Olympics. So much for building drama.

And now, as Eastern Europe is transformed and the Soviet military threat dwindles, the East Bloc countries don't even make good bad guys. Former U.S. President Ronald Reagan will speak at the Goodwill Games opening ceremonies Friday night at Husky Stadium, but he won't be able to call the Soviet Union the "evil empire" anymore.

So what's the sense? Why do we need the Goodwill Games? "It won't decide the best in the world," Cava said. "But it's going to give the best in the world a chance to compete."

More than 2,500 athletes from more than 50 countries will participate in 21 Goodwill Games sports. The schedule includes a mix of winter and summer sports such as figure skating, ice hockey, gymnastics, swimming and diving, baseball and basketball.

The strongest competition of the meet probably will come in track and field, which occupies the first week of the schedule.

Joyner-Kersey, a double gold medalist at Seoul, has set her sights on breaking the 7,300-point barrier in the seven-event heptathlon. Her own world record is 7,291 points, and her Goodwill Games mark is 7,148.

"I think it's reachable, but the key is going to be the high jump and the javelin," she said as she made her final run-up for Seattle at the Olympic Festival in Minneapolis. "It's just a matter of continuing to keep the focus."

Sotomayor, part of a strong Cuban team, is the only high jumper ever to go over 8 feet, breaking the world record in Puerto Rico on July 29. He'll be accompanied on the Cuban team by middle distance runner Ana Quiroz, Track and Field's Female Athlete of the Year in 1989.

Leading a powerful Eastern Bloc contingent will be women's world record-holder Paula Ivan of Romania in the mile, pole vaulter Sergei Bubka of the Soviet Union and discus thrower Juergen Schult of East Germany. Three world record-holders in swimming, all Americans, also are entered: Tom Jager, David Wharton and Janet Evans.

An all-American confrontation also shapes up in the 100-metre dash between Carl Lewis and Leroy Burrell, neither of whom has been beaten in 1990.

"I'd say next to the Olympics, it's the best field that's ever been assembled in multisport competition," Goodwill Games Vice President Jim Sheldon said.

Biggest Washington event in years

The Goodwill Games will be either a boon or a big headache for Washington state residents, depending on their perspective.

In a few days, 2,500 athletes, an estimated 60,000 out-of-state visitors and camera crews enough to beam the Olympics-style event into hundreds of millions of homes worldwide will converge here for opening ceremonies.

For Walsh, who drew up the original plans for the games on a cocktail napkin with Turner Broadcasting Chairman Ted Turner, the games have represented a battle for credibility.

Through four years of planning, Walsh has overcome initially skeptical sponsors, a battle with city officials over security costs, and ticket cancellations to bring the games off on schedule and so far within budget.

"We had an awful lot of problems to get over. We didn't have 400 million dollars like the Olympics do from TV revenue, but we have to put out the same kind of event," Walsh said. "I think we're right on target."

For Gov. Booth Gardner, the July 20 to Aug. 5 games represent a chance "to move us up in terms of where we stand in the minds of people all over the world."

He has predicted the games "will do phenomenal wonders for the state of Washington."

But to police in Seattle, Spokane and other event cities, the games mean longer hours, increased workloads and the threat of international terrorism.

Washington state has dedicated $12 million for games protection and other costs, and estimates have local police and the federal government spending up to $20 million more to protect athletes, spectators and dignitaries.

The games are already a disappointment for hotels because of high hopes that have not materialised.

"In some cases rooms have been released because no one knew exactly what to anticipate," said Steve Morris, president of the Convention Bureau in Seattle. "Everyone was crystal-balling it and the crystal ball was a little hazy."

The Seattle committee was distributing last week a flyer urging locals to buy event tickets and "help put the Goodwill Games over the top."

"Several high-visibility Goodwill Games events, including boxing and men's basketball, have not yet sold out. It is our goal to fill the stands — for the athletes and the international TV cameras," the flyer said.

Soviet planes intercepted

Meanwhile three Soviet planes bound for the Goodwill Games arrived in the United States by day early — and were met by U.S. Air Force jets scrambled to intercept them over Alaska.

An Ilushin-62 passenger plane carrying Goodwill Games visitors, accompanied by two SU-27 military jet fighters, left the Soviet Union Friday because their crews feared further delays.

The planes had been delayed a day from leaving Moscow, then delayed again when they stopped to refuel in the Soviet Far East.

"We were afraid that they would close the border for us so we left today, the day before we were scheduled to take off," said passenger Nina Walsh, the Soviet-born wife of the president of the Seattle organising committee for the games.

Although they left the Soviet Union Friday, it was still Thursday when they crossed the date-line — the day before they had been permitted entry.

U.S. fighter planes intercepted them about 160 kilometres north-west of Nome, Alaska, and escorted them to Elmendorf Air Force Base near Anchorage.

"We had picked them up on long-range radar as unknown tracks We knew what they were when we went up to get them," said Captain Monica Aloisio, spokeswoman for the air force. "But we were expecting them tomorrow."

The planes stayed at Elmendorf until late Thursday, unable to get U.S. State Department permission to proceed to Seattle. Bob Walsh called Andy Card, special assistant to U.S. President George Bush, and Card called the U.S. Defence Department.

Escorted by two U.S. F-15 fighter planes, the three planes finally arrived in Seattle Thursday night.

Looking at all four hands it might seem that, at four hearts, declarer must lose two trump tricks, a club and either a diamond or a spade. But watch what happens with imaginative play.

Note South's decision to jump to the heart game. With a weak six-card major suit and unbalanced distribution South had no desire to play in no trump, and a jump to three hearts would suggest either that a no trump contract was a viable alternative or, if South were to remove three no trump to four hearts, that a heart slam was possible.

West led the jack of spades, won in dummy. What seemed like a ploy to pose a major problem when West, at trick two, discarded a club on the ace of hearts. After some thought, declarer uncovered a line which, with the blessings of Dame Fortune, would allow him to scrape home. It would require West to hold the ace of clubs and specifically two diamonds.

After coming to hand with the king of diamonds declarer cashed the ace and led a club toward the king. West climbed up with the ace to play another spade, taken by the table's remaining high spade. A diamond was discarded on the king of clubs and a diamond was ruffed, setting up dummy's diamonds.

The ace of trumps provided an entry to dummy and a winning diamond was led. Whether or not East ruffed declarer would discard his spade loser. The only tricks the defenders collected were two trumps and the ace of clubs.

Note that declarer will go down if he does not cash both diamond honors after first testing trumps. He will be an entry short to establish and cash a diamond.

Power struggle turns Liberia into a tribal killing field

MONROVIA (R) — A battle for power between two men has turned Liberia into a tribal killing field.

With rebels pushing into Monrovia, frightened residents awake each day to find more corpses dumped in the streets.

Both the unruly army of President Samuel Doe and Charles Taylor's National Patriotic Front guerrillas run death squads exacting tribal vengeance.

The victims are mainly civilians. Some bodies have been mutilated — even beheaded — as a warning to others.

They nearly all come from one of the warring tribes — Gios and Manos for the rebels, and Doe's Krahn people and Mandingos for the government.

Diplomats estimate several thousand people have been killed since Taylor invaded the Gios stronghold of Nimba county in northeast Liberia in December with a motley band of 150 men and a handful of weapons.

Doe sent his Krahn-dominated troops to crush the rebels. They killed Gios instead and looted and burned their villages. This rekindled tribal hatred still smouldering from revenge killings in 1985 after an abortive coup by Doe's right hand man, General Thomas Quiwonkpa, a Gios.

The army turned Nimba into a rebel recruiting ground and Taylor's guerrillas, clad in jeans, T-shirts and red headbands, have advanced into in Monrovia's suburbs ready to attack Doe's fortified executive mansion.

As the rebels closed in the number of bodies washed up by the Atlantic breakers near the cliff-top mansion increased. Most were shot by the army and soldiers dug a mass grave on the shore.

The beach has been the army's favourite place of execution since Doe had 13 cabinet ministers of the civilian government beheaded in 1980 tied to posts there and shot by firing squad.

Three soldiers bundled a man out of a car on the beach on July 9. They shot him in the back with their U.S.-supplied M-16 automatic rifles in front of two journalists.

A day later the same trio grabbed high school student Junior Vea, 19, from in front of the U.S. embassy, drove him to the same stretch of beach and slit his throat.

The soldiers accused both their victims of being rebels. They told one man who saw them dumping the second body that the murder was in revenge for the killing of Krahn by rebels near the eastern suburb of Paynesville.

Similar killings have been carried out all over this besieged capital of half a million people which has been without fresh food, water, fuel, electricity and international communications for two weeks.

"People will not bury the bodies," said one Liberian as he stared at a headless corpse from a safe distance. "They are afraid of being linked to the rebels."

Doctors have warned Monrovia of the danger of a cholera outbreak. Diplomats from one Western embassy buried one corpse themselves on a beach outside their mission.

Doctors from the city's main John F. Kennedy Hospital tried to find a bulldozer this week to bury 100 rotting corpses from its unrefrigerated mortuary. Nearly all had been shot.

The hospital has sent all its patients away because it has no power of water.

The sickly-sweet stench of death also lingers outside the city's last functioning hospital. It is run by Catholic missionaries with the help of Belgian surgeons from the medical relief agency Medecins Sans Frontieres (Doctors Without Borders).

During the week they have operated on 50 people, mainly young civilian men, for bullet wounds.

The killing is far from one-sided. The rebels have also systematically hunted down Krahn and Mandingos, a Muslim tribe of traders and transporters who have prospered under Doe.

Reporters behind rebel lines said the guerrillas shot members of the Krahn tribe in the back and tossed their bodies into a river near Paynesville this week.

One Gios youth who has sought sanctuary in Monrovia has seen the slaughter by both sides.

2 Cubans leave embassy in Havana

PRAGUE (R) — Two of the 14 Cuban dissidents who sought refuge in the Czechoslovak embassy in Havana have left the premises, the Foreign Ministry said Saturday.

One left without informing Czechoslovak officials, but the other asked for and was granted permission to leave the embassy, a ministry statement said.

Czechoslovakia called on Cuba Friday to let the 14 leave the country. But it refused to give protection in the embassy to another five Cubans who the ministry said held the Czechoslovak charge d'affaires in Havana, hostage for several hours Thursday.

Foreign Minister Jiri Dienstbier, currently on a visit to Uruguay, said Friday he hoped the situation in the Havana embassy would be solved quickly and peacefully, the Czechoslovak News Agency (CTK) reported.

Dienstbier told a news conference in Montevideo the dissidents had a right to travel freely and Czechoslovakia would not hand them over to Cuban authorities who insisted they leave the embassy unconditionally, CTK said.

Meanwhile, two young Cubans sought refuge at the Spanish embassy in Havana Friday, joining one Cuban already there and bringing to 22 the total number sheltering in foreign diplomatic missions in the Cuban capital.

A Spanish embassy spokesman told Reuters that the two asked for protection but did not seek political asylum.

He said the Spanish government did not recognise the right of asylum at its diplomatic missions but added: "We can't force them to leave."

Sri Lanka rebels resume attacks on 6 army camps

COLOMBO (Agencies) — Sri Lankan Tamil separatist rebels launched fresh attacks on six army camps in the war-ravaged north Saturday and eight guerrillas and one soldier were killed, military sources said.

The rebels pounded the camps at Palaly, Kilinochchi, Elephant Pass, Mankulam, Kankesanthurai and the Jaffna Fort with mortars, grenades and machine gun fire Friday night and early Saturday morning, the source said.

Nearly 1,000 rebels, members of the security forces and civilians have died in five weeks of fierce fighting between government troops and Tamil minority guerrillas.

The Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), battling for a separate state in the north and east of Sri Lanka, launched their offensive on June 11, abandoning 14 months of peace talks with the government.

On Friday, the separatists captured an army base in the north after four days of heavy fighting in which at least 45 soldiers and 50 rebels were killed, military sources said.

The base at Kokavil in Mullativu district was set up to protect a state television relay station that broadcast to Tamil areas in northern Sri Lanka and southern India.

Rebel mortars destroyed the television tower and set fire to a fuel dump.

The Tigers, in a statement issued from their London office, said 46 soldiers and 18 Tigers, including six women, were killed when a Tiger commando unit overran the camp.

Two vehicles of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) escorted 13 lorries loaded with food and medicine through areas of fighting in the north to Jaffna, an ICRC statement said.

The supplies reached Jaffna Friday after a three-day journey and would be distributed to the civilian population of the northern peninsula, the statement said.

Residents of the north and east, where most Tamils live, have complained of shortages of food and medicine. The government has said it is making arrangements to send supplies with ICRC assistance.

The government, invoking emergency laws, has postponed elections to the northeast provincial council.

The council, one of the key elements in a plan to resolve the separatist rebellion by giving the Tamils more independence, was dissolved this month.

It had not been functioning since March after the majority of its members from rival Tamil groups, the Eelam People's Revolutionary Liberation Front, fled the country fearing reprisals by the Tigers.

The governor of the northeast province, appointed by President Ranasinghe Premadasa, would administer the region until elections can be held, official sources said.

Meanwhile, a Tamil politician claimed Saturday that army soldiers have killed nearly 1,000 civilians in their monthlong war against rebels on the Tamil-dominated east coast.

Kandiah Premachandran said he appealed to Premadasa Friday to stop the bloodshed.

"Since the fighting began on June 11, we fear nearly 1,000 Tamil civilians, men, women and children have been deliberately massacred by the army in the east," he told the Associated Press.

"We have cross-checked our facts. We are 100 per cent certain," he added.

LA commuters back on track

LOS ANGELES (AP) — This smoggy, traffic-choked city inaugurates a $10-billion effort to wean itself off the automobile Saturday when passengers are welcomed aboard new metro Blue Line trains between downtown and Long Beach. The 22-mile (35-kilometer) system, financed by a half-cent Los Angeles county sales tax approved by voters in 1980, actually is a rejuvenation of the old trolleys that covered the same route 90 years ago. But those trolleys became obsolete by 1961 in a city that had become hopelessly hooked on cars.

Although sleeker and faster than its predecessor, the Blue Line could be sidetracked by a 1990s problem. Many neighbourhoods along the 22-stop route are now infested by violent street gangs. The $877-million line is the first part of a $10-billion, 150-mile (241-kilometer) rail grid planned into the next century for Los Angeles, a city of 3,046,000 people ribboned by freeways so jammed the simplest commute can take an hour or more. The area generates some of the worst air pollution in the country. Included in that system is the $1.3-billion metro rail subway, which suffered a setback Friday when fire ravaged a maintenance tunnel under construction. The first 4-mile ($6.4-kilometer) segment was scheduled to open in 1993.

Stones cancel London concert

LONDON (R) — The Rolling Stones cancelled a sell-out rock concert in London Saturday because of an infection in guitarist Keith Richards' finger. Richards, who said his finger had swollen like a football, was earlier confident that the London concert would go ahead even though a performance in Cardiff, South Wales, was cancelled. But the group's spokeswoman Jane Sen said the show was called off after three doctors inspected Richards' finger, badly infected after he cut it on a guitar string. "Two physicians and a hand specialist have conferred and agreed it would not be advisable for him to play for the next couple of days," she said. Saturday's London concert to 72,000 people has now been rescheduled to Aug. 24 and Sunday's to Aug. 25. On the Cardiff cancellation, Richards said: "It's the first show I've ever missed in 27 years. It's like I've blotted my copy book."

Passengers sleep as train is robbed

MARSEILLE (R) — Three gunmen robbed an overnight French mail train in southern France in a wild west-style holdup — without waking the passengers. Postal authorities said they jumped into the locomotive of the Nice-Irun Express as it pulled out of Marseille Thursday night and ordered the driver to stop in open country an hour later some 20 kilometres from Nîmes. Without disturbing the sleeping passengers, the robbers quietly unloaded 39 sacks of mail and registered valuables from two mail cars into waiting vehicles and disappeared within 10 minutes. Authorities said the value of the haul may not be known for weeks.

Ugandans slow to change habits despite AIDS risk

KAMPALA (R) — Health workers are slow to change their sexual habits amid an AIDS epidemic sweeping the East African state. Uganda, with over 12,000 confirmed AIDS cases, and about a million people carrying the HIV virus which is linked with AIDS, has adopted an intensive programme of education to stem the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS). The World Health Organisation and other U.N. agencies are supporting Uganda's efforts. But Dr. Sam Okware, director of Uganda's AIDS control programme, told Reuters in an interview: "If more people do not change their behaviour to lessen the risk of AIDS infection, it will be a long time before we see any results."

"Uganda is not the only place where people are slow to change their sexual behaviour." Parliament last month outlawed extramarital sex and prostitution and prescribed the death penalty or life imprisonment for rape. Sex education classes, with the emphasis on the AIDS risk, are incorporated in school lessons. An AIDS Information Centre in Kampala offers free AIDS tests which people planning to marry are encouraged to take.

Romania students to call fresh protests

BUCHAREST (R) — Organisers of Romania's biggest street protest since the December revolution vowed to call fresh demonstrations after the government rejected their demand for the release of a jailed student leader.

More than 50,000 people gathered outside government buildings in Bucharest Friday to urge the government to free Marian Munteanu and opposition activists.

But the National Salvation Front (NSF) government rejected their demand, saying it did not want to influence the legal process.

"We will carry on our protests. All students are united behind Munteanu's case," said engineer Mihai Murarescu said.

The government said it had set up an inquiry into three days of violence last month and its findings would be made public.

Six people were killed and hundreds injured in protests from June 13 to 15.

Mihai Gheorghiu, vice-president of Bucharest University's Student League, addressed the rally in Victory Square and called on the government to observe fundamental human rights in Romania.

"Human rights in Romania should be on the same level as the civilised world," he said. Students marching through Bucharest were joined by crowds of middle-aged people and couples with children. Hundreds of onlookers lining the streets cheered and waved flowers.

Protesters carried pictures of Munteanu and shouted "judge the miners. The miners should be brought to court."

President Ion Iliescu thanked thousands of coal miners after they rampaged through Bucharest last month to crush anti-government protests. He said they had helped thwart an anti-fascist coup.

Miners beat demonstrators with coshes and pickaxes and ransacked opposition party offices.

Iliescu summoned the miners to the capital after students and other front opponents occupied University Square for seven weeks to protest at alleged Communist influence in the government, despite the December overthrow of dictator Nicolae Ceausescu.

Munteanu has denied government accusations that he incited opposition riots in June.

Students have accused the government of holding him as a political prisoner. They said in a letter sent to government leaders: "Munteanu represents for Romanians the ideals for which they sacrificed themselves during the revolution of December."

Students played a leading role in the uprising and many of them were among the more than 1,000 people killed.

Meanwhile, former agents of the disbanded Securitate secret police, who sowed terror under Ceausescu, are to join Romania's new riot police and intelligence services, Defence Minister Victor Stanculescu said Friday.

Colonel-General Stanculescu said Securitate agents had been vetted at the Ministry of Defence and some had already been recruited for counter-intelligence.

"They are to carry out their duties in a peacekeeping role in the new gendarmerie and the intelligence service under the command of the Interior Ministry," Stanculescu told Reuters in an interview.

Iliescu called for a riot police force, or gendarmerie, to be set up after last month's political unrest, in which miners rampaged through Bucharest, beating up anti-government protesters.

Iliescu said Bucharest police and sections of the army were "psychologically incapable" of controlling the riots.

2 bombs explode in S. Africa; one killed

JOHANNESBURG (R) — Two bombs exploded in Johannesburg early Saturday, one of them killing a waiter outside a hotel, police said.

"The police suspect commercial explosive devices in both cases," police spokesman Lieutenant Peter du Preez said. No other casualties were reported.

The first blast ripped through an alleyway outside a hotel in the western suburb of Florida shortly after midnight, killing the waiter instantly.

About four hours later there was another explosion in the northern suburb Randburg. The South African Press Association said it was outside a house owned by a member of the right-wing Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging Movement, Hans Francois Binneman.

Du Preez said nobody had claimed responsibility for the blasts.

Jos dos Santos, a director of the Portuguese-owned Willy Smith Hotel rocked by the first blast, said he and about 130 other people were still in the bar when it occurred.

White pro-apartheid extremists, some calling themselves the White Wolves, have claimed responsibility for a string of terror attacks to protest at reforms by President F.W. de Klerk designed to dismantle apartheid race laws.

These included attacks on government offices, private homes of liberal politicians, a synagogue and the office of the black National Union of Mineworkers.

They included a blast at the office of a liberal Afrikaans newspaper which reported that white extremists planned to assassinate African National Congress (ANC) Deputy President Nelson Mandela, de Klerk and other politicians.

S.Korean TV networks hit by strike as assembly passes bills

SEOUL (R) — South Korea's broadcasting system was hit by a strike Saturday as the ruling party pushed through parliament a series of controversial bills despite angry protests from opposition members.

One of the 23 bills passed through the assembly's full session calls for the restructuring of the nation's broadcasting organisations, which unions say will curb press freedom.

Dozens of opposition lawmakers formed a human barrier in the main chamber of the National Assembly to prevent Speaker Park Chun-Kyu from taking the podium, witnesses said.

As scuffling erupted, Park's deputy Kim Jae-Kwang, protected by ruling party members, presided over the session in the aisle and quickly announced passage of the bills.

The chamber was filled with angry shouts and members of the ruling Democratic Liberal Party (DLP) hurriedly left. "The days of the DLP's doom are nearing," one opposition member yelled.

The DLP, formed earlier this year after the merger of president Roh Tae-Woo's ruling party and two opposition groups, has more than a two-thirds majority in the 299-member house.

Thousands of union workers at state-run Korea Broadcasting System, the Nation's largest broadcasting network, and two private radio organisations Saturday began an indefinite strike to press the government to withdraw the bill.

Workers at Mubwa Broadcasting Corp (MBC), the nation's second largest television network, went on strike Friday.

"The broadcasting bill is aimed at seizing control of the media. It should be revoked immediately," said a statement issued by an umbrella group of broadcasting unions.

Radio and television stations continued broadcasting with the help of technical staff and non-union members, but news programmes and other live broadcasts were cut short or replaced with movies or pre-recorded dramas.

The government says the new broadcasting bill, which will reorganise the KBS and create a new private television network, will introduce competition and broaden consumer choice.

Opposition politicians have kept up heated, sometimes violent, debate in parliament on various controversial bills since the session started in mid-June. Two lawmakers were injured in fights and admitted to hospital.

Five lawmakers from the opposition Democratic Party and one independent member Saturday told reporters they would resign in protest against the passage of the bills.

Three Democratic Party lawmakers and one from the main opposition Party for Peace and Democracy (PPD) Friday quit their posts, demanding parliament be dissolved for a snap general election.

A military bill rammed through Saturday will greatly boost the power of the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, giving him operational command of all troops in the army, navy and air force. It is now largely a figurehead post.

The opposition says the bill could invite a coup by giving one military leader too much power.

The PPD said the new post was necessary to make the armed forces more efficient in an emergency and to cope with the withdrawal of some of the 43,000 U.S. troops stationed in the country.

South Korea agreed last February to a Washington proposal for a gradual cutback in U.S. troops. The PPD, led by Kim Dae-Jung, slammed the ruling party's action, and said its members would stage a sit-in protest in the National Assembly until midnight (1500 GMT).

"The barbaric acts committed by the DLP today mean the death of democracy," a party spokesman said.

U.K. minister may quit over anti-German remarks

LONDON (R) — Nicholas Ridley, a close cabinet ally of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher who enraged Britain's European partners with a scathing attack on West Germany, faced growing demands Saturday to resign quickly.

The trade and industry minister stoked a political storm over an interview published in the right-leaning Spectator magazine in which he said Germany was out to take over Europe and that giving up sovereignty to the European Community would be like surrendering to Hitler.

Ridley, who also said the French were behaving like the German's poodles, withdrew the remarks before returning to London from a visit to Hungary Friday night. But colleagues in the ruling Conservative Party and political opponents piled on the pressure for him to quit soon to avoid further embarrassment.

The Daily Telegraph, known to reflect the views of prominent Conservatives, said although Thatcher signalled she would leave the decision to him, a limited cabinet reshuffle was expected by Monday at the latest.

But two popular newspapers reported that Ridley had a huge groundswell of support among voters.

The Daily Express, in a phone-in to more than 15,000 people, found that 97 per cent backed him while the Daily Star had 94 per cent saying Ridley was "right to blitz the Germans."

Conservative Member of Parliament John Carlisle said: "Mr. Ridley's view is shared by millions of British citizens."

"I am not prepared to stand aside and see my country reduced to the lap-dog of Europe, and nor is Mr. Ridley, and that is why I fully support his views."

The big question was when Ridley would see Thatcher.

"As far as I understand it, Mrs. Thatcher has no plans to see him tonight and he is not going to Chequers (Thatcher's country residence)," said a spokeswoman for Ridley who was whisked away from Heathrow Airport in a West German BMW limousine.

But the Daily Telegraph and the Daily Mail said a weekend meeting was planned.

The 61-year-old son of a vicar, Ridley's sarcastic style and indifference to criticism has made supporters cringe and his opponents fume. But influential party colleagues were doubtful he could ride out this storm.

Sir Marcus Fox, vice-chairman of the Conservatives' influential 1992 committee, told British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) radio Ridley's position was very bad and that he expected "an important announcement will be made very shortly."

Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd, in comments, seen as repudiating Ridley's remarks, said Friday: "Our alliance, our partnership and our friendship with France and Germany lie at the heart of modern British foreign policy."

But one of Ridley's cabinet colleagues, Agriculture Minister John Gummer appeared to heap more fuel on the political row by accusing West Germans and other Europeans of eating dirty food.

"Other countries have sickness while we have scars," Gummer told a London dinner Friday to promote supermarket food. "I am the only minister in the European Community who raises issues of food safety."

Opposition politicians said Thatcher needed to make her position clear on Europe. She refused to make any comment about Ridley's future Friday as she strolled around a London carnival — and heard two musicians strike up the West German and French national anthems.

"With this indecision following on top of the Ridley insults, her inaction signifies an astonishing abdication of responsibility that will make Britain the subject of, at best, ridicule, and at worst, hostility throughout Europe," said Gordon Brown of the opposition Labour Party.

Meanwhile, France's leading daily Le Monde said Friday many Britons share the anti-German views of Ridley.

French ministers and officials have so far made no comment on Ridley's interview.

Le Monde said in a front-page editorial Ridley proved "one can be born an aristocrat without ever becoming a gentleman."

Le Monde said it feared that Thatcher's failure to summarily sack him showed that even she shared his anti-German and anti-European views.

"Forty-five years after the defeat of Nazism, she detests the vision of a Europe dominated by a German giant with an insolently prosperous economy."

Unlike the French, Britain had never really turned the page on the painful past, it said, adding: "Primal anti-German sentiment is always quick to resurface in the other side of the channel, sustained by the popular press with caricatures and chauvinist stereotypes of Germans as arrogant and bellicose beer guzzlers."

"As powerful as Germany is, it has behaved as an authentic democracy for 40 years now."

Strike emboldens Sandinistas in Nicaraguan power struggle

MANAGUA (AP) — Emboldened by their latest strike, the leftist Sandinistas appear more determined than ever to make good on their promise to "govern from below."

"This is just the beginning," the party newspaper Barricada vowed in an editorial, a feeling echoed less jubilantly by Nicaragua's private sector.

A 10-day strike ended Thursday, the second major walkout by public employees since President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro and her conservative administration took office on April 25.

The strikes forced Chamorro to grant broad concessions on wages and job security for government employees and to put on hold plans to return Nicaragua to a free market economy.

They also deepened her estrangement with the private sector, once a cornerstone of support.

Gilberto Cuadra, head of the nation's leading business group, the Superior Council of Private Enterprise, said Chamorro's concessions will only encourage labour unrest.

"The campaign of strikes will continue," he said.

"The Sandinistas 'are trying to govern behind the scenes. But the reality is that they aren't governing nor are they allowing anyone else to govern," he said.

The latest strike culminated in four days of violence that claimed at least four lives. Paving-stone barricades fortified by burning tires and armed strikers paralysed the city. Gunfire crackled across the capital.

In the countryside, where the planting season was underway, farm workers struck, diminishing hopes for the bumper export crops upon which economic recovery depends.

At the same time, Chamorro came under attack from her own vice president, Virgilio Godoy, and the private sector. The president, they charged, was buckling under Sandinista pressure.

Faced with chaos in the streets, Chamorro settled the strike on leftist terms. And faced with revolt in the conservative ranks, she called for a dialogue on governing policy.

When the dust had settled, the Sandinistas were claiming victory.

"Workers have achieved ratification of union participation in the decisions that affect the economic life of the country," Barricada claimed.

Former President Daniel Ortega was blunt.

"One must deal with Sandinismo, with the revolution, to have stability in this country," he said.

After Chamorro's landslide victory in Feb. 25 elections, Ortega vowed that the Sandinistas would "govern from below" to block any attempt to dismantle more than a decade of revolutionary policy.

Chamorro's conservative economic recovery plan is much criticised on the left. She has said she plans to privatise state-owned businesses and return farmland confiscated after the 1979 revolution while trimming the 65,000-person state payroll.

Most of those plans have been altered by the concessions made in the two strikes.

The president's advisors blame the Sandinistas for planting the seeds of crisis in the two months between their election loss and Chamorro's inauguration on April 25.

The Sandinistas armed tens of thousands of people, urging them to "defend the conquests of the revolution."

They halted the frequent currency devaluations as the amount of money in circulation rose sharply. Central Bank records indicate.
